AUTHOR OF STANDARD INDIAN AND LOCAL HISTORIES

PREFACE

This volume is published by The Historical Society of Newburgh Bay and the Highlands, from a manuscript which was given to it by Mr. Edward M. Ruttenber, shortly before his death.

The Society has so much faith in the accuracy of Mr. Ruttenber's work along historical lines that no effort has been made to amend any of the statements contained in the manuscript except in those few instances in which the members of the publication committee has personal knowledge of some facts modifying Mr. Ruttenber's statements.

To claim that any work of history is absolutely free from inaccuracies would be unwise. But we feel confident that out of the multiplicity of details set forth in the following pages few errors will be discovered.

It is to be observed that the history is not intended to be brought up to the present day. It covers only the period from the earliest settlement of the Town of New Windsor to about the year 1870.

With a deep sense of the gratitude due to Mr. Ruttenber for his painstaking labors in ascertaining and perpetuating the facts connected with the early history of this section of the Empire State, we submit this volume to the public with the hope that our work in editing it will not do discredit to the work of Mr. Ruttenber in gathering the materials.

History of the Town of New Windsor

CHAPTER I.

LOCATION—PHYSIOLOGY—NAME—ROADS—SCHOOLS, ETC.

LOCATION.

New Windsor, originally the extreme southeastern precinct and town of the county of Ulster, and, under the reorganization of the counties of Orange and Ulster in 1799, the central northeastern town of the county of Orange, is bounded on the north by the city and town of Newburgh and the town of Montgomery, on the west by Montgomery and Hamptonburgh, on the south by Blooming-Grove and Cornwall, and on the east by Hudson's river. Substantially in the same latitude, and of corresponding elevation, its mean temperature may be accepted as the same as that of Newburgh, viz: 50 deg. 10 min. The surface of the town is rolling and hilly. The soil may be classed in four divisions. From the Hudson to Muchattoes hill it is gravelly; more immediately adjoining the Hudson deposits of clay underlie the sand.* The southern spur of Muchattoes hill as far west as Vail's Gate, is rough and covered with boulders to an extent that makes its improvement difficult. West from this ridge and until within a mile of Rock Tavern, a rolling upland prevails. The extreme western part is more or less broken by slate ridges. There are many broad and fertile valleys, and there are also hills (so called locally) that are cultivated to their tops. Muchattoes hill, or Snake hill as it is more generally called, on its northern border, the only considerable elevation in the town, rises six hundred feet above tide water. The creeks and streams are Murderer's or Moodna, Silver Stream and Beaver-dam, Goldsmith and Colemantown creeks. Quassaick creek constitutes a portion of the northern boundary of the town and gives to it several valuable mill privileges. Its marsh or swamp

Drift Deposits.*—South of the Quassaick creek the deposits on the slate rock of the Hudson river group is first drift boulders, pebbles, gravel, and clay; above this blue clay covered with gray clay, and above the whole sand and gravel. The height of these deposits is altogether about one hundred feet. The whole plateau adjoining the Hudson river presents a soil gravelly, sandy, clayey—a mixture forming a warm and fertile soil.—Geological Report.

 Hist. Orange Co. and Newburgh, 68, 69, etc. Quassaick is Indian, signifying stony brook; Murderer's creek is so called from a tradition which has been woven upon the original Dutch title of Martelaer. Its Indian name is presumed to have been Waoraneck.

land is the Big Swamp in the northwest part of the town. Washington Lake, for many years known as Little Pond, lies midway on its northern border; it has an elevation of two hundred and thirty feet, and covers, including overflowed swamp, an area of one hundred and seven acres. The Newburgh water-works take its waters, as well as the waters of Silver Stream. The principal agricultural products are rye, wheat, corn, oats, hay, butter and milk; paper and brick are the almost exclusive manufactures, although milling, cotton and woolen goods, snuff and tobacco, and iron implements and glass, have at different times been prosecuted with more or less success. The local divisions of the town are New Windsor village, Moodna or Orangeville, Vail's Gate or Mortonville, Little Britain, the Square and Rock Tavern; Hunting-Grove, a division so called in its early history, is now in Hamptonburgh. It has twelve school and joint school districts, and five churches. The Newburgh Branch of the Erie railroad, and the Newburgh and New York railroad, pass through the eastern part of the town. The town has an area of 20,871 acres, of which about 17,500 are improved. Its population in 1790 was 1,819; 1830, 2,310; 1865, 2,697; 1875, 2,455.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION—NAME.

The district of which the town now forms a part had its first local government under the patent to Captain John Evans, who, being vested with the privileges and powers pertaining to a lordship and manor, had authority to establish a manorial court. It is not probable, however, that during the continuance of his patent (1694 to 1699) any semblance of civil authority was exercised. After the vacation of his patent and with the advent of the Palatines at Newburgh in 1709, that portion of the Evans patent lying in the county of Ulster, embracing the district between Murderer's creek and New Paltz, was organized as the Precinct of the Highlands, and attached to New Paltz. In this relation it remained until 1743, when three full precincts, having all the officers of towns and exercising all their duties, were established by act of the colonial assembly. These precincts were known and called "by the name of the Wallkill Precinct, Shawangunk Precinct,* and Highland Precinct." The latter was more particularly described in the act as "bounded on the east by Hudson's river; on the south by the line dividing the counties of Ulster and Orange; on the west by the precincts of Wallkill and

*Shawangunk Precinct an organization contemporary with the Precinct of the Highlands, and in its original boundaries embraced the territory covered by the subsequent Precinct of Wallkill and Shawangunk.

Shawangunk and the neighborhoods annexed to New Paltz, and on the north by the bounds or line of New Paltz town." The precinct meetings were to be held "at the house of John Humphrey, Jr., on the first Tuesday in April, annually, for the election of precinct officers." It continued in existence until 1762, when it was divided into the precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor, "by a line beginning at the mouth of Quassaick creek and running thence along the south bounds of a tract of land commonly called the German patent, to another tract granted to Alexander Baird & Co., and then along the southerly bounds of the last mentioned tract to the Wallkill precinct;" all the land theretofore comprehended "within the said Highland precinct lying to the southward of the said dividing line, to be called by the name of New Windsor Precinct." More clearly defined boundaries appear from those giving the limits of the Newburgh and Wallkill precincts, the latter being extended on the south "to the north bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Patrick Hume, by the north and west bounds of the lands granted to Cornelius Low and others, and by the northwest and southwest bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Phineas MacIntosh," while the bounds of Newburgh extended south to Quassaick creek and thence west along the south line of the Baird patent. The latter line has never been changed; the western line, however, was destroyed by the organization of the town of Hamptonburgh in 1830. The district remained under the title of "precinct" until 1788, when, under the general law of that year, it was constituted the "town" of New Windsor, and its boundaries defined as follows: "All that part of the said county of Orange bounded easterly by the middle of Hudson's river, southerly by an east and west line from the mouth of Murderer's creek,* and westerly and northerly by a line beginning at the west side of Hudson's river at the mouth of Quassaick creek, and running from thence along the south bounds of a tract of land commonly called German patent and the southerly bounds of a tract of land granted to Alexander Baird and Company to the east bounds of two thousand acres of land granted to Cadwallader Colden, and then across the same to the most northerly corner of the land granted to Patrick Hume, and thence along the westerly bounds thereof to the lands granted to Patrick McKnight, and then along the same southwestwardly to the southerly corner thereof, and then continuing the last mentioned line to the town of Blooming-Grove so as to include the lands formerly of Fletcher Matthews."

* The line of the county of Orange prior to 1779.

 As above stated the Western boundary was changed by the erection of Hamptonburgh.

The name of the town is from Windsor, England, with "new" prefixed. By whom it was conferred cannot now be ascertained, but undoubtedly by some one of the early settlers whose associations with the English government were such as to lead him to a lively remembrance of his royal sovereign. It has its first record in connection with the missionary labors of the London "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts," in the annals of which it is written (1728), that "the Society has received many fresh applications from congregations of people in the Plantations to have missionaries sent to them; particularly from the inhabitants of New Windsor, in Ulster county;" and during the following year (1729), that "the Society have received a letter from the Rev. Mr. Vesey, at New York, enclosing one from Francis Harrison, Esq., one of his Majesty's council of that Province, wherein he acquaints, that, pursuant to the decree of the Society, he has inquired into the number, condition and circumstances of the inhabitants of New Windsor and parts adjacent, and is informed this district is twenty miles from north to south and sixteen from east to west, and contains about four hundred inhabitants; that the chief of them live in good credit and reputation; but that there is no clergyman to officiate among this large body of people within eighty miles distance."—from which it appears that the name was then applied to a specific portion of a proposed parish district. Two years later a minister was appointed for the parish who preached at three different stations within its limits, viz: New Windsor, on the Hudson; at what is now known as St. David's in Hamptonburgh (then Goshen); and at St. Andrews in Montgomery—the latter station erecting the first edifice (a log house with a fire-place) for divine worship.* A few years later the name was generally accepted as defining the southern part of the Precinct of Highlands, and is of record in that character in a report, made by Thomas Ellison in 1755, of the number of slaves therein, the precise language being: "In the Southern Division of the Precinct of New Windsor otherwise called the Highlands." In the subsequent division of the precinct of the Highlands, and the erection therefrom of the precincts of Newburgh and New Windsor, the latter assumed the name by which it had already become specifically recognized.

TOWN RECORDS.

The records of the town begin on the first Tuesday of April, 1763, when "agreeable to the directions of an act of the Governor, Council, and General Assembly of the province of New York—an act entitled 'an act for dividing the precinct of the Highlands, in Ulster county, in two precincts (by a line therein mentioned), one to be called by the name of New Windsor precinct, and the other by the name of Newburgh precinct,'” a meeting was held at the house of Judah Harlow, for the purpose of electing precinct officers, who were chosen as follows: Joseph Belknap, clerk; George Harris, supervisor; Samuel Brewster, George Denniston, James Humphrey, assessors; Alexander Denniston, constable and collector; Judah Harlow and Capt. James Clinton, overseers of the roads; David Crawford and John Nicoll, overseers of the poor; Andrew Crawford and William Lawrence, fence viewers.

* This building was located at the fork of the road now leading from St. Andrews to Shawangunk and Walden.

ROADS.

The earliest roads of the town were the King's highway, better known locally as the Goshen road, and the highway now known as the Little Britain road. The first extended through the town from north to south, and the second from east to west. At a later period connecting roads were opened from the Orangeville settlement on Murderer's creek; from Little Britain to Coldenham (the Ridge road), and in the village of New Windsor* The latter, however, were not recognized by the town authorities. In 1766 the roads of the town were defined, in the appointment of overseers, as follows: "Moses Fowler, overseer from Mr. Falls' saw mill to New Windsor; George Denniston, from the west line of Johnson's patent to Mr. Falls' saw mill; Thomas King, from the west line of Johnson's patent to the north line of the precinct; Francis Mandeville, for Goshen road and the roads about Murderer's creek." In 1769 the road district and overseers were: "John Galloway, overseer from William Mulliner's to the precinct line westerly; James Denniston, from William Mulliner's to the top of Snake Hill; Theophilus Corwin, from the top of Snake Hill through New Windsor to Hudson's river, and up Goshen road as far as the road that leads off to Arthur's mill, and to take all the inhabitants on the north side of Murderer's creek as high as they are to work; Samuel Arthur at the creek and the rest of the road upwards, and to take the remainder of the inhabitants left therein."

Patrick McClaughrey, James McClaughrey and George Clinton, commissioners under the act of 1770, divided the town into road districts as follows:

"The first or New Windsor District—bounded North by the precinct line,

* The road known in Newburgh records as "the Wallkill Road," running west of Muchattoes hill from the Little Britain road to Newburgh, is also of very early date, but has no specific record in the minutes of New Windsor.

West by the top of Snake Hill, and a straight line running from thence to where the King's Road meets Goshen Road near the house of Timothy Wood, and Southerly and Easterly by the East side of said King's Road and the land of Col. Thomas Ellison and the Hudson River, including in said district the road leading from Goshen road back of William Ellison's house to New Windsor.

"The second or Creek District bounded as follows: To the North and West by the New Windsor district to where the road leading from Little Britain to the Creek or Brewster's Forge meets said New Windsor District; south by the county line where the Goshen Road crosses it; West by a straight line from thence to where the said road leading from Little Britain to the Creek leaves the New Windsor road, and Southerly and Easterly by the south of said road leading to New Windsor and the New Windsor district, including in said district last mentioned the said road leading from the New Windsor road to the creek or Brewster's Forge.

"The Middle or Third District is bounded as follows: To the East by the New Windsor and Creek districts; Southward by the County line and Northward by the precinct line; Westward by a line running Northerly from the County line, so as to include Alexander Falls, Jr., James McClaughry, and Charles Clinton, Esq., and cross the road one chain West of William Mulliner's house, and including in said district Alexander Falls, Senr., Robert Buchanan, and the inhabitants north of them and to the East of the Great Meadow to the precinct line, and Northward by the precinct line.

"The West or Fourth District bounded as follows: East by the Middle District, South by the County line and North and West by the precinct line."

The districts designated were generally known and called, and so entered on the precinct record as 1, The New Windsor district; 2, The Creek district; 3, The Little Britain district; 4, The Hunting-Grove district. In 1772, the Creek district was divided. In 1774 the Middle and the Hunting-Grove districts were divided and a new district called the Silver Stream district, established; and in 1781 the Little Britain district was divided and a new district established called the Stonefield district.*

The roads or streets of the village of New Windsor were dedicated to public use by the proprietors of the plot in 1749. The dedication is entered in their minutes as follows: "Ebenezer Seely, Esq., shall execute a conveyance of the land laid out in New Windsor for roads to Vincent Matthews, Joseph Sackett, Hezekiah Howell, John Yelverton, and Thomas Jones (executor of Dr. Evan Jones) and their heirs and assigns forever for the purpose hereinafter mentioned, to wit: That the said land shall be and remain forever hereafter for the use of the inhabitants and settlements made at New Windsor as public streets or roads according as they are laid out upon a draught or plan of New Windsor."

The Newburgh and New Windsor turnpike company was incorporated by act of legislature passed April 2d, 1806. Capital, $5,000. Charles Clinton, Daniel Stringham, John McAuley, George Monell, Hugh Walsh, *Town Records. Stonefield was the residence of Rev. John Moffat, where he kept a grammar school. It was on this road leading from Little Britain to Washingtonville, and the residence of Robert Shaw.

Isaac Hasbrouck, Selah Reeve, Joseph Morrell, Abraham Schultz, Richard Trimble, Jonas Williams, John D. Nicoll, and Samuel Lockwood, were the first directors. The road extended from Newburgh to New Windsor village, where it connected with the Cornwall turnpike.

The Snake Hill turnpike company was incorporated March 24, 1815. Capital, $14,000. Jonathan Hasbrouck, William Taylor, Hiram Weller, Nathaniel DuBois, and Jonathan Hedges, directors.

The New Windsor and Blooming-Grove turnpike company was incorporated April 3d, 1801. Capital, $7,500. Directors: John Chandler, Richard Goldsmith, William Adams, James Carpenter, William A. Thompson, Abraham Schultz, Hezekiah Howell, Johannes Decker, Jonathan Brooks, Jr., Thomas A. Thompson, Isaac Schultz, and John Gale, Jr. The line of the road was "from the village of New Windsor to the intersection of the Goshen and Warwick road."

SCHOOLS.

The first entry in regard to public schools is at the annual election in 1796, when David Dill, John Dill, Daniel Borden, John Denniston, and Francis Crawford, were elected commissioners, with authority to "buy a book at the expense of the town" in which to make entry of school accounts. The same persons were reappointed in 1797, but no further entry appears until 1813, when, on the 10th of May, at a special election, Joseph Morrell, Thomas King, and William Mulliner, were elected commissioners of schools, and Thurston Wood, David Dill, and Thomas Fulton, inspectors of schools. On the 18th September, 1814, the commissioners named divided the town into nine school districts, viz: No. 1, village of New Windsor District; No. 2, Murderer's Creek District; No. 3, Good Hope District; No. 4, Center District; No. 5, Square District; No. 6, Little Britain Meeting House District; No. 7, Union District; No. 8, Good-Will District; No. 9, Hunting-Grove District. In 1816 one of the districts was divided, making ten. The first report of attendance and distribution of public money is recorded as follows: Number of children between five and fifteen years, 597; amount of public money, $258.75.

There were, probably, some private schools in the town as early as 1740. Dr. Joseph Young writes in regard to the education of his older brother, Thomas: "Our grandmother, Jane, was a good English scholar and learned us to read. As there were but few children in their new settlement (Little Britain), they had no schoolmaster; but my father, who was a tolerable arithmetician, undertook to teach him with the assistance of Cocker's Arithmetic." This was written of Thomas when he was six or seven years old, and as he was born in 1731, it shows that there was no school at that time. He adds: "Some time after, Mr. John Wilson, a famous mathematician, opened a school about four miles distant, to which the young self-taught student was sent. Mr. Wilson's mathematical fame soon procured him an invitation to open a school in New York, where he removed." Rev. John Moffat was probably Mr. Wilson's successor. He was the pastor of Goodwill Church from 1751 to 1765. The authority already quoted continues: "Fortunately there came a minister to the parish who was a good linguist, under whom he completed his Latin education." The description and the periods to which it refers alike point to Mr. Moffat, who was the pastor of Goodwill church from 1751 to 1765, and whose last years are known to have been employed as an instructor. His school was known as "Moffat's Academy." It was situated on the road leading from Little Britain to Washingtonville on the farm now (1880) owned by Robert Shaw. The house was one story and a half, with basement. The school was kept in the upper rooms, Mr. Moffat and his family occupying the basement. The school was partly, if not wholly, broken up during the Revolution. While the probabilities favor Mr. Moffat, we find it written in connection with the education of James and George Clinton, that the latter attended a school conducted by Rev. Daniel Main, a minister from Scotland.

SUPPORT OF POOR—LICENSES.

The support of the poor of the town was in the manner provided by law. The first public tax appearing on record was under the act of the assembly, passed December 31st, 1762, when the sum of twenty pounds was raised to pay expenses of previous years. In 1770, twenty shillings only was raised; in 1778, eighty pounds ($200); 1779, one hundred and fifty pounds; 1780, five hundred pounds ($1,250), but this amount probably represents depreciation in currency rather than an increase in pauperism. In 1782 the practice of selling the support of paupers to the lowest bidder was introduced and followed for many years. The town is now included in the county system.

Licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors have been issued since 1796, in which year the fees received amounted to $65. In 1815 the sum of $88 was received, and nine tavern and six permit or store licenses were granted. These figures are introduced merely as the foundation of comparative statistics. The local travel of half a century ago, however, required a far greater number of taverns than at the present time or since the introduction of railroads.

POST OFFICES.

The first post office in the town was at Little Britain. It was established May 29, 1824—Hamilton Morrison, postmaster; Chas. Palmer, postmaster 1834. The second, the New Windsor post office, was established February 19, 1829—Abraham Schultz, postmaster; John Hall, postmaster, 1834. The third, Mortonville, was established April 10, 1850—John D. Vail, postmaster. The fourth, Moodna, the date of establishment not ascertained.

CHAPTER II.

PATENTS AND FIRST SETTLEMENTS—PIONEER ERA.

Originally covered by the patent to Capt. John Evans, the district embraced, when it was constituted a precinct in 1762, patents and portions of patents* issued as follows: 1, Patrick MacGregorie, 160 acres, August 24, 1721; 2, William Chambers and William Southerland, 1,000 acres, September 2, 1709; 3, Charles Huddy and Philip Brooks, 4,000 acres (in part), February 20, 1709—subsequently included in a grant to Mary Ingoldsby and her daughter Mary Pinhorn, August 12, 1720; 4, John Haskell, 2,000 acres, April 9, 1719, and 2,000 acres, August 24, 1721; 5, Vincent Matthews, 800 acres, June 17, 1720; 6, John Johnson, Jr., 1,000 acres, February 3, 1720; 7, James Henderson, 1,184 acres (in part), February 12, 1722; 8, Vincent Pierce, 1,000 acres (in part), July 21, 1721; 9, Lewis Morris, 1,000 acres, July 21, 1721; 10, Andrew Johnson, 2,000 acres, July 19, 1719; 11, Patrick Hume, 2,000 acres, November 29, 1721; 12, Cornelius Low and Company, 3,292 acres (mainly), March 17, 1720; 13, Richard Van Dam, 1,000 acres (in part), June 30, 1720; 14, Phineas McIntosh, 2,00 acres (mainly), April 9, 1719. As defined by the boundaries of 1801, the town included, in addition to the foregoing, a considerable portion of the patent to Cadwallader Colden (15), granted April 9, 1719. Portions of the Low, McIntosh, and other patents were cut off by the erection of the town of Hamptonburgh in 1830, but all the patents enumerated are represented in the land titles of the town.

MacGregorie Patent.—In the order of settlement, the town is the oldest in the present county, having been begun by Colonel Patrick MacGregorie, in 1685, on the lands subsequently embraced in the patent to his son, Patrick MacGregorie, and now known as Plum Point. The story of this first settlement has the interest of romance. Its founder was a native of Scotland, and a soldier of fortune. He served in the *Patents described as mainly or in part included in the precinct, were divided by the old line of the counties of Orange and Ulster.

The original Colden patent was conveyed by Cadwallader Colden to his son, Cadwallader, Jr., Sept. 7, 1771. The deed particularly describes the property as that "whereon the said Cadwallader, the father, for many years resided commonly known and called Coldengham."—Ulster Records.

English army in France under Charles I, and on his return took part in the religious controversy of 1681-82. One of the results of that controversy was the emigration to America of a large number of Presbyterians, and among others a company of which he was the chosen leader. This company landed in Maryland in 1684, and from thence came to Perth Amboy, N. J. Ultimately Staten Island was selected as the place for permanent settlement, and MacGregorie petitioned for permission to take up lands there; but at the instance of Governor Dongan, he removed to the Highlands, where he purchased from the Indians four thousand acres, for himself and his associates, the latter, so far as can now be ascertained, being composed of his brother-in-law, David Toshack, who boasted the title of "Laird of Minivard"; Daniel Maskrig, a servant or in the employ of Toshack, and one Collum.* After erecting a commodious log cabin, he mastered the Indian language, and, in company with Toshack, established a trading post on Sloop Hill. While in this occupation he was appointed muster-general of the militia of the province; was subsequently sent on a mission to the French Indians, by whom he was captured and taken to Montreal. Returning from captivity, he took part in the Leisler revolution, and was killed in the effort to reduce the Leisler party, in March, 1691. He left surviving him and in occupation of the lands which he had purchased, his widow, Margaret, his sons, Hugh, John, and Patrick, and his daughters, Catharine Evans and Jane Lawrence. Toshack continued the trading post on Murderer's Creek until his death in 1689, when his affairs passed into the hands of his clerk, Daniel Maskrig, for settlement. He left one son, who died without issue.

*Margaret MacGregorie, widow of Patrick MacGregorie, recites in petition of November 23, 1710, that in addition to her husband and David Toshack, were "twenty-five others, their families and sundry of their servants." Capt. Evans, in his petition, November 1, 1711, states that he "planted several families of Scots and Irish under annual rent," referring without doubt to the MacGregorie colony. Soon after the death of her husband, Mrs. MacGregorie and her son Hugh, were granted 1,500 acres of land near Peekskill. This tract was sold to Stephauns Van Cortlandt, July 13, 1696. In the deed to Van Cortlandt, the reading is "Hew Mac Gregor, gentleman, of New York." No doubt the founder of the family was of the Scotch Clan MacGgor. Some of the members of the clan changed their names, when the clan was proscribed in 1296, to MacGregorie and Gregory.

Daniel Maskrig, late servant to David Toshack, late of ye county of Orange, informing that ye said Toshack is deceased, and none having power to meddle with his estate, it is danger of being embezzled. Ordered, that the said Maskrig do take all ye Indian goods, and all personal estate which ye deceased died possessed of, into his custody, and make a true inventory thereof; that he dispose of ye Indian goods and receive ye debts due by ye Maskrig and render a true account of what he shall do here as in Board by ye ten of April next.—Council Minutes, Dec. 3, 1689

Meanwhile the lands which MacGregorie had purchased were included in a purchase made by Governor Dongan, and, after MacGregorie's death, were embraced in the patent to Captain John Evans. The subsequent history of the settlement is stated in a petition by Mrs. MacGregorie, in 1710, who recites that her husband and her brother, David Toshack, "were not only the first Christians that settled and improved thereon, but also peaceably and quietly possessed and enjoyed the same during the term of their natural lives, though as yet they had no patent for the said lands, which happened partly by the death of your petitioner's brother and the public engagements of your petitioner's husband"; that since the death of her husband (March 19, 1691), a patent had been petitioned for but had not been granted; that one had been issued to Captain John Evans "comprehending the lands which your petitioner's husband and brother had taken up, purchased and truly paid for and settled as aforesaid, by force of which patent, in the dead of winter, he, the said Evans, expelled your petitioner and family from said lands, to the utter ruin of your petitioner and all depending on her." By the subsequent petition of Patrick MacGregorie, Jr., it would appear that Evan's object was to perfect his title, as he gave to the petitioner (Oct. 10, 1697), "and to his first wife, and to his son," a lease confirming them in the use and occupation during their natural lives of "all that the hill and land" where the petitioner lived, possession of which was threatened by a patent which had been issued to Charles Huddy and Philip Brooks. In this petition (Nov. 12, 1712), patent was asked for the lands covered by the lease and described as: "All that the hill and land whereon the petitioner lives, encompassed with a swamp, beginning where one Collum then lately lived, and so running along a swamp next the land, on the one side, down to Hudson's river on the other side, bounded by the said river; on the third side beginning at the end of said swamp and running to the foot of the upland till it comes to said Hudson's river, including the morass." It was not until the ninth of August, 1720, that the claim of the MacGregorie's was finally adjusted, at which time letters patent were issued conveying to Patrick MacGregorie, in acknowledgment of the purchase and occupation by his father, the Plum Point farm of one hundred and sixty acres; and, in acknowledgment of the claim of David Toshack, a tract of five hundred acres on the north slope of Butter Hill,

*"Capt. Evans' grant has but one house on it, or rather a hut, where a poor man, lives, and that hut built by Captain MacGregorie, a Scotchman, who was killed at the time of the Revolution here, and his widow said to be compelled by Col. Fletcher, to sell her house and land to Capt. Evans for £30 or £35, to the ruin of herself and family.—Colonial History, IV. 822.

to which he became heir through the death, without issue, of Toshack's son, Thomas.

At what time the MacGregorie family removed from Plum Point is not of record. It is only shown that from 1685 to 1720, its occupation by them was continuous. On the 7th October, 1734, Dr. John Nicoll, of New York, purchased the place from John Waldron, Cornelius Van-Horne, and James Livingston, who appear to have been a company engaged in the purchase and sale of patents. The title of a portion of the tract, including the original Nicoll homestead, erected in 1735, is now in the descendants of Dr. Nicoll;* the remainder was the property, at the time of his death, of Philip A. Verplanck.

Chambers and Sutherland Patent—The second settlement in the town was that of the patent to William Chambers and William Sutherland. Although issued in their names, the patentees had but one-third interest each in the grant, it being of record that they consented, "for and in consideration of one equal third part of said tract," that their names should be made use of in obtaining the grant by Colonel Peter Matthews, who, by the agreement, became the owner of the remaining third. The lands are described in the patent as "lying in the county of Ulster, north of Murderer's creek, bounded north by the Widow Plettell and Quassaick creek, on the east by Hudson's river, and on the west by the hill Much-Hattoes." In the division of the patent (Nov. 7, 1723), Chambers was assigned lands immediately south of Quassaick creek, Matthews received the center of the plot, and Sutherland the southern part. The land had been previously cleared of timber, as appears by a petition from Chambers for an additional tract (June 17, 1720) in which he states: "The petitioner, with great labor and expense, hath for some years past, settled, cultivated and manured a small farm to the northward of Murderer's creek, upon Hudson's river; but before, the said land was granted unto him, most of the timber that stood thereon was cut down and carried away for the use of the crown, so that he hath not a sufficient quantity for fencing and for the use of said farm; but near to a place or hill called Much-Hattoes there are certain lands, mostly stony and unfit for cultivation, which he will take and pay the rents required therefor."

Chambers died in 1738, and his portion of the tract passed to his sons, William and John. The former died without issue, and full possession passed to the latter, who obtained, in 1753, a grant of the lands under water extending from the lands then owned by what were known as the "Proprietors of New Windsor," to the Quassaick. On the 6th of November, 1758, he conveyed the property to Nathan Smith, "blacksmith, of Kingston," together with a portion of the Ingoldsby patent, purchased by his father, William Chambers, in 1726, and also part of lot No. 1, of the German patent, purchased by himself from William Brown, of Salem, Mass., in 1742. From Nathan Smith the title passed in part to Robert Boyd, Jr., and to George Clinton. Boyd erected a smithery on Quassaick creek and subsequently engaged in the manufacture of guns for the revolutionary authorities. Clinton erected, immediately adjoining Boyd, a saw mill and a grist mill, and occupied the farm house on the premises. He sold to Hugh Walsh, April 26, 1790, and the latter conveyed the grist mill property to Isaac Schultz, July 25th, of the same year. Retaining the remainder, Walsh erected a paper mill and homestead house, subsequently the farm homestead and paper mill of his son, John H. Walsh, and now in the possession of his children. The portion more immediately representing the Chambers homestead house and residence of George Clinton, came into the possession of Captain Charles Ludlow, and is now the residence of Thomas Christie.

The central portion of the patent (that held by Peter Matthews) was purchased by John Alsop (1724-5), who, in company with his brother-in-law, Joseph Sackett, Jr., settled on the lands immediately after, and erected a dwelling house and barn, and also a store-house and landing on the Hudson.* He sold (1749) the tract, or a considerable portion of it, to an association or company organized under the name of "The Proprietors of New Windsor," who founded thereon what is now known as the village of New Windsor, but which was then called "The Township of New Windsor." More particular reference to this township will be made hereafter.

The southern part of the patent was mortgaged by Sutherland, then in possession and occupation "for many years," to John Ellison, of New York, November 26, 1718, to secure the payment of £160. Ellison made an additional loan of £140, May 7, 1721, and perfected his title to the property May 8, 1723, when his son, Thomas Ellison, took possession, erected a stone mansion on the bluff overlooking the river, and a dock and store-house, where he conducted a mercantile and forwarding business which was continued by his descendants.

*Sackett purchased from Alsop a lot of land lying at the foot of what was called "Union Street," and had there a dock and store house from which he sailed a sloop and where he proposed in 1743 to locate a ferry to Fishkill. There were several settlers under Alsop, one of whom, on the Haskell patent, was Robert Hoey.

Vincent Matthews Patent.—The patent to Vincent Matthews, immediately adjoining the southern portion of the Chambers and Sutherland patent, was purchased by Thomas Ellison on the 24th of January, 1724, and on which he erected, in 1754,* the stone farm-house and mill near Vails Gate (subsequently occupied by his son, John Ellison), now generally known as Knox's Headquarters.

Ingoldsby Patent.—The fourth settlement was by John or Joseph Gale, in 1726, on the northwest corner of the Ingoldsby patent. Yale sold to Thomas Ellison in 1736. William Chambers was a purchaser of part of the patent in 1726. James Edmonston is said to have purchased one of the lots in 1727; but his deed is not recorded, nor does his name appear on the tax-roll of that year. He was an early settler, however. The stone house, which he erected in 1754, is still standing, and is associated with the annals of the town in the war of the Revolution. Peter Post was the purchaser from George Ingoldsby, July 22, 1730, of five hundred acres on the north bank of Murderer's creek. He sold to Dr. John Nicoll, April 12, 1738, leaving behind him the name of "Post Hill," by which one of the elevations on the tract is still known. The title to a considerable portion of this purchase remains in Dr. Nicoll's descendants. The most considerable and important of the early settlements on the patent, however, was of that portion now embraced in the village of Moodna, which was purchased from Mary Ingoldsby by David Mandeville, May 1, 1728. Mandeville sold to Samuel Hazzard, who, in company with his brother, Nathaniel Hazard, established a landing at Sloop Hill, erected a mill, and laid out a township plot under the name of Orangeville.

Haskell Patent.—The patent granted to Colonel John Haskell was settled by himself in 1726. He erected a log house on what was afterwards known as the Dusenberry farm, and which is now standing on lands adjoining the farm late of Ezra P. Thompson, Muchattoes hill. To this portion of his patent he gave the name of "The Hermitage"; divided it into farms, and remained in occupation of his original location, it is said, until his death. Tradition asserts that after obtaining his patent, he visited England and brought back with him many kinds of seeds, plants and cattle, which he cultivated and raised. Evan Jones, surgeon, was among the early settlers on the patent, having purchased and occupied lot No. 3. His farm of two hundred and ninety-two acres was sold by Bridget Jones, John Jones, and Thomas Jones, his executors (Dec. 27, 1763), to Samuel Brewster, who erected (1768) what is now known as the Brewster house. Henry Haskell, a son of the patentee, also had a title for a portion of the tract, under which he became a freeholder in 1728. John Alsop was a purchaser on the east, and sold to the proprietors of New Windsor (1749), the deed, being given to Ebenezer Seely "of Greycourt, in the precinct of Goshen," in trust for the proprietors, as appears by their minutes. The western part of the patent, or more properly speaking, the first patent to Haskell (April, 1719), was conveyed by him to Elizabeth Stollard, June 13, 1719, who sold six hundred and thirty-one acres to John Crawford, weaver, October 18th, 1738.* Andrew Crawford sold part of the purchase of John Crawford to Neil McArthur, March 1st, 1763.

*An earlier date has been given to this building, but the contract for its erection, recently discovered, fixes the year precisely—1754. William Bull was the builder.

It has been stated, but on what authority does not appear, that this house was erected in 1729, and that at that time it was the only house between New Windsor and what is now Washingtonville.

McIntosh Patent.—The first settler on the patent to Phineas McIntosh, was John Davis, in 1724-5. Davis' deed (July 5, 1726), recites the sale to him of fifty acres "on which his house now stands." Robert Boyd, "blacksmith and farmer," was also an early settler. He sold to Nathaniel Boyd, July 12, 1759, "fifty-four acres adjoining Joseph Sweezy's land." Joseph Sweezy appears on the military roll of 1738,

*On the military roll of the "Wall-a-Kill" district (now Montgomery) of 1738, are the names of James Crawford, John Crawford, William Crawford, James Crawford (probably son of James first mentioned), and Samuel Crawford. Whether they were all sons of James, the first mentioned, does not appear from any record. The late David Crawford gave his descent from James. John Crawford the second mentioned, has been identified as the settler on the Haskell patent. He married Sarah Barkley and had Robert I., Andrew, George, John, Israel, Nancy, Sarah, Ellen, Pelianna, and Ketura. James Crawford, jr., Samuel Crawford and David Crawford, were patentees of lands in Walkkill precinct in 1761. These facts may aid in tracing the genealogical lines of a very numerous and respectable family. There was still another John Crawford. He was related to the Clintons and settled near Albany. (See sketch of Doct. Young).

The Davis house was a stone structure and is still standing. It is the third house from Rock tavern on the road to Washingtonville. John Davis is name in will of Mathew Davis, "of Hunting-Grove, Ulster County," who died about 1748, as appears in Abstract of Wills, at Albany in Newburgh Free Literary. John Davis also appears on the tax roll of the Precinct of the Highlands in 1728.

and was a settler prior to that time. The Dill family were also early purchasers. A considerable portion of the patent passed to the hands of Nathan Smith, through his wife, Susan McIntosh, who established thereon a grist mill, a fulling mill, and a store, giving to his place the name of Hunting Grove. The mills are now known as Buskirk's and are in the town of Hamptonburgh.

Andrew Johnston Patent.—The district known as Little Britain, of which this patent is the center, had its first settler in John Humphrey, who purchased, in 1724-5, a farm lot of two hundred and fifty acres, being part of the Andrew Johnston patent. Peter Mullinder purchased and settled on a farm of the same patent, Sept. 29, 1729. Robert Burnett, of Raritan, N. J., Oct. 7, 1729, and at the same time, John Reid; Charles Clinton, of Longford, Ireland, Aug. 22, 1730, and at the same time Mary McClaughry (widow), John Young, Alexander Denniston, Andrew McDove (McDowell), and others. John Humphrey took his deed Dec. 6, 1731, although his land was located in 1724. The lot purchased by Mary McClaughry was bounded west by Humphrey and north by lands of Betsey Mallard, widow, showing the residence there of the Mallard family (now written Mallard and Mailler), as early as 1730. Her farm was subsequently purchased by Robert Carscadden. The Clinton company was the most numerous body of settlers on the patent and in its neighborhood, but of whom it was composed cannot now be accurately ascertained. The journal of Clinton's voyage supplies the names of Armstrong, Beatty, Barkey, Brooks, Denniston, Davis, Dunlap, Frazer, Gordon, Gray, Hamilton, Little, Mitchell, McDowell, McClaughry, Nicholson, Oliver, Thompson, Wilson, and Young.

Low & Co.'s Patent.—The patent to Cornelius Low and Company (Cornelius Low, Garret Schuyler, and John Schuyler), was divided among the patentees. The third held by John Schuyler passed by his will to his nephews, Brant and Samuel Schuyler, and on the death of the latter to Brant Schuyler. The other patentees sold to Allan Jarratt, April 5th, 1720, a very considerable portion of their interests. Cornelius Low sold, Sept. 1st, 1734, six hundred acres to John Vance, of Newark, who conveyed two hundred acres to James Thompson, "lately of Drumeel, in the county of Longford, Ireland, but now a resident in Little Britain, in the county of Ulster, in the province of New York," by deed dated May 22d, 1738.* John Slaughter was a settler on the patent as early as 1726, and Thomas Shaw was a purchaser in 1726 or 1729. John McMichael was a purchaser in 1738. William Miller, weaver, then a resident on the patent, purchased, Nov. 12, 1746, two hundred acres. Brant Schuyler sold (Aug. 22, 1744), to Charles Beatty, *two hundred acres, which the latter sold to James McClaughry, July 14, 1749. Thomas King was also an early settler. By deed from himself and his wife, Lydia, a portion of his lands were conveyed, April 9, 1773, to Capt. Robert Cross, who, in company with James Clinton, laid out a township plot thereon to which they gave the name of Montgomery. It is not to be confused with the later village now known as Montgomery. Samuel Wood, Alex. Falls, James Denniston, George Denniston, Isaac Moffat, James McClaughry, and Alex. Stewart, were owners in 1780.

Hume Patent.—James Gembell and John Humphrey purchased, in 1724, three hundred acres of the patent granted to Patrick Hume, and divided the same equally, by agreement, April 6, 1730. Gembell sold to Patrick Byron, March 12, 1744, and Humphrey sold to Patrick McClaughry, Feb. 22, 1769. One-half of the remainder of the patent (850 acres) was sold by James Lithgow, of Scotland, nephew of the patentee, through his attorney, Cadwallader Colden, to James Neelly, Henry Man-Neelly, Henry Man Neelly, William Young, and Patrick McClaughry, Mch. 6, 1794, and the remaining half (850 acres) to the same parties by Hannah Lithgow, widow, and John Nicholas, carpenter, of Philadelphia, April, 1750. June 10th, 1757, William Young sold to Samuel Sly 233 acres, now known as the Sly homestead. The Gembell and Humphrey portion of the patent was sold to William Telfordand Samuel Falls, and in 1822, was owned by John Finley, Robert Burnet, Wm. Mulliner, and E. Keled, Sr.

John Johnston, Jr., Patent.—This patent was transferred to Cadwallader Colden on the date of its issue.* A branch of the Belknap family settled on it, Benjamin Belknap paying the quit rents in 1789.

Van Dam Patent.—The patent to Richard Van Dam passed to the possession of Jesse Woodhall, who settled at Blagg's Clove, in the present town of Blooming Grove, in 1753. He subsequently became well known in Orange County as colonel of the Cornwall militia during the Revolution, and as a representative in the State Senate from 1777 to 1780. David Gallatien, John Moffat, and Peter Welling, and his brother held portions of the patent.

Henderson Patent.—John Wandel was an early purchaser of a portion of the Henderson patent. David Edmonston was also an early purchaser; he held part of lots Nos. 3 and 4.

Lewis Morris Patent.—Alexander Denniston, Francis Crawford, Thomas Cook and Wm. Denniston were owners of eight hundred acres of this patent in 1780.

Satisfactory records showing first settlements on the remaining patents and portions of patents have not been found. They were, however, occupied at an early period.

From this brief recapitulation of early settlements in the precinct, it will be seen that few districts in the province were more densely occupied, sparse as was the population; and it may be added that in few districts if any were the immigrants of a class that commanded more general respect. The upper portion of the precinct was in woodland "through which," remarks Cadwallader Colden, Jr., "one could not see the sun shine," and the honor was not with himself alone of felling "the first tree" and "taking out the first stub." The eastern part of the precinct, on the contrary, was partially prepared for cultivation through the removal, as has been already stated, of the forests by employes of the government for shipment to England. Whatever the primal condition, however, the years were not many before no small number of the settlers could say: "I have made a small spot in the world, which, when I first entered upon it, was the habitation only of wolves, bears and other wild animals; now, no unfit habitation for a civilized family. So that I, without vanity, take the comfort of not having been entirely useless in my generation."

Long years before the commencement of the more active settlement of the town (1724), a road, known as the King's highway, had been opened, from Kingston, with branch to New Paltz, running through Newburgh (now Liberty Street), to Quassaick Creek, which is crossed west of Schultz's mill, turned west and passed through New Windsor, west of the village, thence to Bethlehem, and the Clove to the King's ferry at Stony Point, with a branch to Goshen. To early settlers it became known as the Goshen road.* The tradition may well be believed that at least that portion of it leading to Goshen was originally the Indian trail or footpath through the district which it traversed, and there is no improbability in the story that the first settlers of Goshen, including the heroic Sarah Wells, landed at New Windsor and from thence followed this trail to their new homes. Soon after settlement commenced a road was opened through the center of the district from New Windsor to Neelytown and Walkkill. Along and in the vicinity of these roads the principal settlements were made. Other roads were of course subsequently opened as they were required, the earliest being the branch road to Orangeville or Brewster's forge, the Ridge road, and the roads constituting the Little Britain square.

The dwellings of the settlers were of logs or stone; in some cases the former being squared or axe-hewed. Their out-buildings were of logs, and their church edifices but mere unfinished barracks. Traveling was mainly on foot or on horse-back; wagons were few and rude, many of them being made with wheels cut from the end of a log; sleighs were literally sleds, the runners formed from the limbs of trees or cut from a plank, or taking their highest mechanical form in runners bent from a sapling with supporting knees worked out by a draw-knife. If there were those who had European implements, and the "one-horse chaise," now so rarely seen, except in pictures, they were few in number. The people were poor; their numerous acres even being worth but a paltry sum. But wealth came gradually; in less than forty years the more fortunate were able to inventory of household goods, "several boxes and cases of china, some cases of pictures and looking-glasses, several tables (one a marble slab), chairs, window curtains, some ornamented china, with images of Shakespeare and Milton in plaster of Paris." Silverware, and stoves, and the harpiscord, too, became known among them; and as opportunity offered they acquired negro slaves, of whom, in 1755, Col. Thomas Ellison owned six; James McClaughry, one; James Edmonston, one; Doct. Evan Jones, six; Capt. Charles Clinton, two; Christian Hartell, two; Joseph Sackett, Sr., one; Rev. John Moffat, one; Francis Nicoll, one; James Jackson, Jr., two; and, John Chambers, two—a record which is of interest also as showing the social rank of the persons named, for few there were who could own slaves, even in those cheap times.

*This name appears in patent boundaries as early as 1719. The term "King's Highway" has no other significance than that it was a public road opened as all public roads are.

See road districts in Chapter I.

But the reclamation of the wilderness—the erection of dwellings and mills—the opening of roads—the establishment of schools and churches—the acquirement of wealth and social rank—was not the limit of their lives. The rugged front of war was at times on their borders, and every man capable of bearing arms was not only enrolled, but obliged to be in readiness to take the field either against the native enemies of civilization, or against the French. From 1756 to '58 the militia of the district was in the field in guarding the frontiers and on duty in other parts of the province. It was in these campaigns that the Clintons received their first lessons in arms, and, with many of their neighbors, became fitted for the more arduous struggle for national independence. Writes Thomas Ellison in 1757: "It is but too well known by the late numerous murders barbarously committed on our borders, that the county of Ulster and the north end of Orange is become the only frontier part of the province left unguarded and exposed to the cruel incursions of the Indian enemy, and the inhabitants of these parts have been obliged to perform very hard military duty for these two years past, in ranging the woods and guarding the frontiers, these two counties keeping out almost constantly from fifty to one hundred men; sometimes by forced detachments, both of the militia, and at other times men in pay by voluntary subscriptions; nay, often two hundred men; which has been an insupportable burden on the poor people, and has driven all the young men out of the county. And yet all the militia of these parts were ordered to march to Fort Edward, while the officers had no orders to leave a detachment to guard the frontiers. So orders were given to the whole to march; but one might as well have torn a man assunder as to compel those who lived in the very outside houses to leave their wives and children to become a sacrifice to worse than wolves. However, the generality of them marched, and that so soon as it was possible to get so scattered a people together. And I would say for the three hundred who went out of the little distressed second regiment of Ulster, that men never marched with more cheerfulness and resolution, and had not the wind failed toward the end of their passage to Albany, they would have been at Fort Edward a day before Fort William Henry surrendered. When the wind failed us, every man labored at the oar; and when we arrived at Albany, made no stay to inquire particularly whether we could get kettles and such necessaries at Fort Edward; we were told in a general way that everything was provided for us. Neither did we wait to have a wagon provided to carry our baggage, or to lay in our stores of wine, tea, equipage, etc., but every one, both officers and privates, packed their bundles on their backs, and the colonel, though an old man and afflicted with rheumatism, marched on foot with his musket on his shoulder at the head of his men, and waded through rivers crotch deep, and in two very hot days marched from Albany to Fort Edward, in less time, I believe, than troops ever marched it before. Some of the men indeed dropped by the way, not being able to hold out, and in general all complained that their officers marched too hard for them.

"When we got to the camp opposite to Fort Edward we had the melancholy news of the surrender of Fort William Henry, which could not but effect the spirits of every one. However, for the first two days that we laid there, no uneasiness was discovered in the minds of the men, but an impatience to go forward and retake the fort at all events; and that this was not affectation plainly appeared when Sir William Johnson informed them that an advanced party of the enemy lay between the two forts, and desired such as had courage to fight to go voluntarily with him to rout them. Upon which the whole camp, in less than an hour, got under arms and waded up to their middles in water through Hudson's river to Fort Edward, with all the life and courage imaginable. Scarce could any one be persuaded to stay in the camp to take care of what was left there, no one examining into the probability of success, but placing confidence in the judgment of the commanders. The last of the militia had not got well through the river before the attempt was thought hazardous, whereupon we were ordered back to our camp. This sudden change created great uneasiness in the minds of the men, who now soon began to complain of the intolerable hardships they suffered lying in camp, and the danger they were in of catching the smallpox, etc. But what had the greatest weight on the minds of our people and the most difficult to be removed, was the apprehension that the French might take the opportunity to send Indians upon the frontier settlements in order to throw the country into confusion, and thereby prevent the militia from marching to the assistance of the province, or to protect their wives and children at home. So that after laying five days in camp and hearing that the French were destroying and abandoning Fort William Henry, it was impossible to prevail with the men to stay any longer."

Other manuscripts of official record show that the fears of these men were well founded. The tide of savage warfare soon rolled almost to their very doors; the west side of the Wallkill was completely devastated; ranging the woods, "and anxiety of mind which the inhabitants could not well avoid, increased by the perpetual lamentations of the women and children," partially draws aside the veil of the past and permits an imperfect vision of pioneer life in its most rugged aspect.

CHAPTER III.

THE VILLAGE OF NEW WINDSOR.

The village of New Windsor was laid out as a township plot in 1749, by a company under the title of "The Proprietors of New Windsor," and was one of four township plots similarly opened for settlement in the present county of Orange, viz: Goshen, in 1714; Newburgh (Old Town of Newburgh plot*), in 1730; New Windsor, in 1749; and Chester, at about 1750. The precise date of the organization of the company does not appear, nor are its articles of association recorded, if such were entered into. The first entry in its original book of minutes is under date of September 9, 1749, at which time the members of the company were Vincent Matthews, Ebenezer Seely, Michael Jackson, Joseph Sackett, Jr., Daniel Everett, Hezekiah Howell, John Sackett, David Marvin, Evan Jones, and Brant Schuyler, who had, prior to that date, purchased from John Alsop, that portion of the patent to Chambers and Sutherland held (under the partition of that patent) by Col. Peter Matthews.

Immediately after organizing, the proprietors employed Colonel Charles Clinton as clerk and surveyor, who surveyed and made a map of the plot, divided it into lots and streets, and rendered the following accounts:

The first sale by the proprietors was to Henry Brewster and Judah Harlow, in September, 1749, of a store-house, dwelling house, barn, and lot. In 1752, the proprietors obtained a patent for the soil under water adjoining the township plot, uniting for that purpose with John Chambers,* and also established a ferry to Fishkill. The proprietors, in January, 1751-'2, were James Tuthill, Henry Brewster, Samuel Brewster, Brant Schuyler, Evan Jones, John Yelverton, Hezekiah Howell, Joseph Sackett, Jr., Ebenezer Seely, Vincent Matthews, and John Nelson, who executed (Jan. 3d) a deed to Samuel Bayard and Company for twelve lots, "at low rates and under value, to encourage the said Samuel Bayard and Company for the building and erecting a glass house for making glass and potash, which the said Bayard and Company have agreed to erect upon the said lots." In July of the same year, the proprietors were Vincent Matthews, Ebenezer Seely, John Yelverton, Hezekiah Howell, John Sackett, Brant Schuyler, Henry Brewster, Evan Jones, James Tuthill, Joseph Sackett, Paul Richards, Nathan Smith, and Christian Hertell, from which it appears that purchasers of lots became, to the extent of contributing to the obtaining of the land under water and the opening of roads, members of the Association. In 1772, James Clinton, Robert Boyd, Jr., Theophilus Corwin, George Clinton, David Holliday, and James Dunlap, appear in the list, in which year James Clinton was elected clerk of the township. At this point the record ceases; it conclusively establishes the date, however, of the founding of the village, the grants of soil under water, and the establishment of the manufacture of glass, an industry then in its infancy in the provinces of America. The village, already a commercial center of some importance, increased rapidly in population, and until after the close of the Revolution gave promise of becoming one of the first cities on the Hudson. Its business enterprises and the causes of its decline are more specifically noticed in the following sketches:

*This patent covered the land under water from Quassaick creek to the South line of the township plot, the Northern part being confined to John Chambers, immediately south of the plot, Thomas Ellison held the grant of the same franchise. The entire river front of the town was thus taken up, except a small section of Plum Point.

Glass Works.—The manufacture of glass was commenced in the village of New Windsor sometime about 1753, by a company of which Christian Hertell, Samuel Bayard, Lodwick Bamper, and Mathias Earnest were members, the first named being the resident manager. The following agreement recites the purchase of lots for the purpose and other matters connected with it:

"Memorandum that we, the subscribers, have this third day of January, 1751-2, agreed with Vincent Matthews, who acts in behalf of Samuel Bayard, in New York, for a parcel of lots lying and being at New Windsor, being part of the lands we purchased from John Alsop at New York, in the following manner, that is to say: We, the said subscribers, do agree to sell the following lots with the prices thereunto annexed, viz:

"Provided, nevertheless, that as the chief reason for selling the above lots at such a low rate and under value, is upon this account, viz: To encourage the said Samuel Bayard & Company for the building and erecting a glass-house for making of glass and potash, which the said Bayard & Company have agreed to erect upon some of the above said lots; but in case the said Bayard & Company should fail, and throw up, and not build the said works, then and in such case the above agreement to be void and the lots to remain to the above owners; and we, the above owners and subscribers, do hereby acknowledge to have received from the above Samuel Bayard, by the hands of Vincent Matthews, the full one equal half part of the above mentioned sum of forty pounds, being half of the above purchase money, and we do promise and agree to execute, each for himself and for his heirs, good and lawful deeds to the said Samuel Bayard & Company, each for his share or part of the above lots, upon the said Samuel Bayard's paying the rest or the other half of the above purchase money—which said half is to be paid on or before the twenty-fifth day of March next ensuing the date hereof—which said deeds are to be at the proper cost and charge of the said Bayard & Company.

The works were conducted for a number of years—it is said until after the war of the Revolution. A second undertaking of the kind was commenced in 1867, by a company of gentlemen, principally residents of Newburgh, who regarded the peculiar stone of Butter-hill as a superior material for glass ware, but the experiment failed. The ordinary sand glass was subsequently made for a few years.

Commercial Records.—Commercial trade on the Hudson, in colonial times, was essentially different from that of the present day. In its earliest stages, sloops and scows were loaded with goods and made coasting trips, stopping perhaps at different points with more or less regularity and selling goods directly to the immigrant settlers, or supplying trading posts similar to that established by MacGregorie and Toshack at Sloop-hill. It was in business of this character that John Ellison, the progenitor of the New Windsor family of that name, was engaged in New York, where he owned, at the foot of Little Queen street, at an early date, one of the four wharves on the west side of the city, a store-house and several sloops. His sloops were of course ready to convey immigrants and their household effects to their new homes along the river, for such was the mode of transit, and after they were located, to make them periodical visits with supplies. For the accommodation of themselves as well as the traders, it was not uncommon for the settlers to unite in erecting a store-house (not unfrequently called an "Union store-house"), in which the products which they wished to send to market were placed for shipment, as well as the goods which they had purchased, awaiting convenience for removal. Indeed a common store-house on the Hudson, either as an individual undertaking or an associated enterprise, was a necessity for every settlement; the record of their existence at Newburgh, New Windsor, and other points, as early as 1730, is complete. New Windsor thus became one of Ellison's trading posts; there he supplied goods to Chambers and Sutherland, and others, and there he subsequently obtained landed interests. On his death, his sons, John and Thomas, continued his business, the latter entering into possession of the New Windsor estate, and through himself and his descendants maintained connection with the New York house for nearly a century.

The Ellisons however, were not alone in commercial venture at New Windsor. Joseph Sackett, Jr., a merchant and trader in New York, and his brother-in-law, John Alsop, bought land there at about the time of the Ellison purchase, on which Alsop settled, and the minutes of the Proprietors show that on the lands which they acquired from Alsop had been previously erected a house, store-house and barn.* It is also of record that Sackett was the owner, in 1742, of a wharf and store-house adjoining Ellison's on the north, and that it was subsequently merged in the sale to the Proprietors. This wharf was at the foot of Union street, and was subsequently occupied at different periods by Matthew DuBois, Jr., William Jackson, and Isaac and Abraham Schultz, the latter extending it to the channel of the Hudson and constructing the store-house which in more recent years has stood in decaying solitude on its terminus. The business of the Ellisons, however, was for many years far in excess of that of their contemporaries; their books show the names of the ancestors of nearly all of the old families of northern Orange and southern Ulster, who found in them not only their tradesmen, but their bankers. In later years, and until his death, the business of Abraham Schultz was by no means inconsiderable, and had it fallen to equally vigorous successors, would have occupied in the near past a not less extended record.

It should not be understood that the commerce of New Windsor was confined to the firms which have been named. There were others. The limited advertising record shows that in 1793, Gillespy & Scudder (John Gillespy and William Scudder), conducted the freighting business there. In 1794, Isaac Schultz & Son and Joseph Morrell sailed the sloop Sally, Ichabod Lockwood master, and the sloop, Susan, Jacob Wood master. In 1799, Abraham Schultz sailed "the commodious new sloop, Fanny," of which he was also the master. In 1803 and '4, he sailed two sloops, the Mary, Ichabod Lockwood master, and the Fanny, Samuel M. Logan master; in 1806 the sloop Mary, William Walsh master, and the sloop Industry, Reuben Reynolds master; in 1811-'16, the sloop Superior, William Peet master, and the sloop Perseverance, Thos. Sayre master, and the same vessels and masters until 1825. He died in 1830. The Ellison line was continued by Ellison & Floyd (William Ellison and Samuel Floyd), in 1804; they sailed the sloop Harriet, Jonathan Brown master, and the sloop Minerva, Reuben Reynolds master; in 1807-'10, the sloops Harriet and Attentive. Thomas Ellison (2d) and Samuel

* The first store-house at Newburgh was erected by the proprietors of the Township of Newburgh (more generally known as the "Old Town of Newburgh Plot"), in 1730, as appears by deed of partition executed by Phineas MacIntosh and John Yalverton, April 3d, of that year. It is presumed that it was under similar circumstances that the "Union dock," in New Windsor, received its name.

 Matthew DuBois united with Thomas Ellison, in 1705, in resisting the order of the officers of customs requiring all sloops trading on the Hudson to enter and clear at Albany or New York. He died in Newburgh in 1790, aged 75 years. Jackson occupied the wharf at the outbreak of the Revolution, and Isaac Schultz immediately after the war.

 Gillespy at that time owned twenty-four of the town lots, besides his residence on Union Street.

Moffat continued the line in 1811-'12, sailing the sloop Attentive, Samuel M. Logan master, and the sloop Envoy, Nathan H. Sayre master. Of other more recent lines was the sloop Goliah, by Joseph Morrell, from the Schultz dock in 1800, and Morrell & Walsh (Joseph Morrell and William Walsh), sloop Goshen, in 1804. The sloop Hopewell formed another line in 1802—Daniel Borden master and owner. Among the more recent firms was Knapp, Dolson & Co., who sailed the steamer Norfolk, Capt. Jacob Wandell, and the sloop Spy, Captain Geo. L. Sherwood, in 1832. The barge Experiment, built as a steamboat at New Windsor in 1828, for the Cornwall trade, subsequently sailed from New Windsor under command of Capt. Dyer Brewster. The freighting business was continued by different parties until after the opening of the Erie railroad. The latest advertised enterprise (1850) was that of Joseph Carpenter, who sailed the steamboat Norfolk, Capt. Lewis O. Carpenter, every Monday and Thursday.

Although the commerce of the place was continued with more or less activity until the death of Thomas Ellison (2d) in 1830, and of Abraham Schultz, in 1835, its decadence, as well as that of the village, began at about the commencement of the century. At that time its population was nearly equal to that of Newburgh, although the latter had a much larger acreage.* Contributing to its decline and ultimate discontinuance were several causes, among which may be mentioned the active rivalry of the village of Newburgh, the advantages which its property holders offered to settlers, the superiority of the river front for commercial purposes, and the efforts of the people generally of that place to improve their trade by the construction of turnpike roads. An examination of the maps of that period will show that prior to the opening of the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, New Windsor had the advantage in roads and in the lines of communication between the eastern and western parts of the county, as well as in what would now be termed the through travel between the eastern states and the west. The construction of the Cohecton turnpike and its western connections changed all this, and changed it so seriously that the old ferry from New Windsor was discontinued in 1812, and most of the mechanical and trading population of the place removed to Newburgh. Its fatal misfortune, however, was in the previous folly of its landowners, who made the rivalry of contemporary communities possible. The river front, capable as it was and as it still is, of improvement, was held by one or two individuals, who were thereby enabled to control the destiny of the entire community. They had the trade, they had the roads, they had the wealth, why should they permit competition or encourage development? They did not; they chained up the river front with paper deed, denied accommodation to competing business, and dried up the springs of action which impel communities to undertakings in which mutual prosperity is involved. From their presence enterprise and the enterprising fled away. True it is now as true it was when Goldsmith penned it—

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

Beyond the product of brick, for the manufacture of which there are six establishments, the village of New Windsor has now no commercial business except that which finds its way by the Erie road and the Newburgh barges. The prosperous city which, under proper development, might have resulted from its founding, remains a city "neither perfected or inchoate."

General Business.—The early business men of the village, aside from those engaged in freighting, have very imperfect record. Capt. Jonathan Lawrence kept store there in 1776. Abraham Van Deursen "opened a house of entertainment, at the sign of the Confederation," in 1782. Subsequently removed to Newburgh, where his daughter married Joseph Hoffman. William Scudder* opened a land office in July, 1793. Benjamin S. Hoyt, "practitioner of physic and surgery," sold medicines in 1798. Matthew C. Lyon was a physician prior to that time; he died in 1798. Richard Edgerton sold dry goods and groceries, and carried on the shoe-making business. Sanford & Fitch sold dry goods, iron mongery, crockery, etc. Isaac Schultz & Son, dry goods, groceries and general merchandise; William Ward carried on the silversmith business "a few rods south of the ferry." The advertisements of these gentlemen appear in the New Windsor Gazette, a weekly newspaper, the publication of which was commenced by Jacob Schultz, Nov. 10, 1797.* It is presumed that all branches of business common to the times were prosecuted there with more or less success down to the commencement of the present century.

New Windsor Ferry.—All traditions agree that at the village of New Windsor a ferry was maintained to Fishkill at a very early period.

* This paper was continued until 1799, when it was removed to Newburgh and its title changed to Orange County Gazette. David Denniston subsequently purchased it.—Hist. Newburgh, 346.

There is no evidence, however, of a chartered privilege there, as at Newburgh. In 1742, April 12, Joseph Sackett, Jr., of New York, representing himself as "seized in fee of and in a small piece of land at a place called New Windsor, in the county of Ulster, lying on the west side of Hudson's river and contiguous thereto, between the land of John Alsop on the north and of Thomas Ellison on the south," petitioned for a "grant of the sole liberty of having a ferry, at any convenient place within the distance of five miles on each side of his said land, with privilege of landing on the opposite shore."* In the minutes of the proceedings of the Proprietors of New Windsor, Feb. 12, 1755, it is written: "A letter was directed to be sent to Vincent Matthews, asking him to prepare a petition to his Honor the Lieut. Governor, for a charter for a public ferry for the benefit of the proprietors of the said township of New Windsor." A still later petition is on file at Albany, dated Nov. 23d, 1762, signed by Matthew DuBois, Jr., praying "a grant of the exclusive right of ferriage, on the east side of Hudson's river, for the distance of one hundred and sixty chains (two miles) to the southward of an east line across the said river from the north side of Quassaick creek, for the purpose of establishing a ferry across said river."

There is no record that any of these petitions were granted, or that that referred to in the minutes of the petitioners was even presented, but that there was an established ferry there is certain. Morgan and his famed rifle corps passed over the river on its boats in July, 1775, on their march to join Washington at Boston. At that time it was owned by Martin Wiltsie of Fishkill and Daniel Carpenter of New Windsor, and ran from what was long known as the Lower Landing at Fishkill (more recently Lomas' brickyard) to New Windsor, or to Newburgh, if required by passengers. It is said that it was a chartered ferry, but if so the grant is not recorded. Its history is more or less connected with that of the Colden or Newburgh ferry and of the Continental ferry. The former was chartered in 1743, and gave to Colden the exclusive right to convey passengers from Newburgh to Fishkill, but conveyed no ferriage right from Fishkill; the latter was established by authority of the Quartermaster General of the Continental army for communication between the encampment at Fishkill and Newburgh. It ran from the Upper Landing at Fishkill to the foot of Third street at Newburgh. It was discontinued in 1782. Whether the boats which it employed were taken from the Colden ferry or otherwise supplied does not appear, but its discontinuance was the occasion of the establishment, by Peter Bogardus, of Fishkill, and John Anderson and James Denton, of Newburgh, of a new ferry, which was announced by advertisement as "a private ferry at Fishkill and Newburgh Landings, where the public ferry was formerly kept"—i. e. from the Upper Landing at Fishkill to the foot of Third street, Newburgh. Wiltsie and Carpenter replied to this advertisement that its language implied that their ferry "was no more," whereas, on the contrary, their ferry "being opposite to New Windsor," was "the most convenient for travelers," and added: "We have furnished ourselves with excellent new Pelytangers for the purpose. We have now larger scows building with great expedition, for transporting loaded wagons. All such as chuse to cross at this ferry can do so at the prices set forth underneath, which are as cheap as at other ferries. For a footman, one shilling; man and horse, two shillings; two horse wagon, nine shillings; loaded do, twelve shillings; riding chair, six shillings; four horse wagon, fourteen shillings; loaded do, one pound; phaeton and pair, twelve shillings; ton of iron, eight shillings; hogshead of rum, five shillings."*

The Wiltsie and Carpenter ferry was consolidated with the Newburgh Ferry in 1805—a fate, it may be remarked, which some years later overtook the Bogardus and Anderson ferry, as well as the ferry which was subsequently established by John Peter DeWint, from the Fishkill long wharf to the foot of Fourth street at Newburgh. Prior to its consolidation with the Newburgh ferry, however, Abraham Schultz established a ferry from New Windsor to Fishkill, announcing, in 1800, that he had "provided a complete new ferry boat" which would "ply continually between New Windsor and Fishkill Landing," and that he intended "to pay particular attention to the business." It is said that this ferry was discontinued in 1812, but this is presumed to be an error. No ferry has been maintained, however, for a number of years.

Mr. William H. Bartley, who spent a half century of his life in boating on the Hudson, states that his brother, Jacob Bartley, was in the employ of Wiltse and Carpenter for a number of years as their ferryman at New Windsor, sailing a pirogue from the dock immediately north of the Schultz dock to the Lower Fishkill Landing. On the Fishkill side

* Fishkill Packett, July 18, 1782.

 The existence of so many ferries between Newburgh and Fishkill is perhaps contrary to the generally received opinion that the exclusive grant to Colden in 1743 was valid forever. No attempt was ever made to test the force of the Colden charter against any of the rival ferries, although the latter were in competition with it for over forty years.

the ferryman was Crom. Wiltse, a slave owned by Martin Wiltse, who also sailed a pirogue.* These vessels, and two or more row-boats, constituted the ferry appointments. At the landing on the Fishkill side, Wiltse had a large store-house and other accommodations, and sailed from thence to New York a line of sloops. The store-house was burned some years ago. The boats landed passengers at Newburgh whenever it was desired; indeed a very considerable traffic was carried on between Newburgh and Fishkill.

Famous Buildings.—The headquarters of Washington at the old Thomas Ellison house, immediately south of the bounds of the old village, is referred to in another place. Aside from this there are no other buildings historically remarkable except that known as the birth-place of DeWitt Clinton. Notwithstanding all that has been written to the contrary, we have little doubt that he was born here, and not in Deerpark or in Little Britain. Charles Clinton, of Little Britain, who was the clerk of the "proprietors," erected in the village a house, barn, etc., sometime about 1760. He transferred his clerkship to his son, James, the father of DeWitt, in 1762, and in 1773, sold and transferred to him the property. James married Mary DeWitt, of Deerpark, and her first child, Alexander, was born there in 1765. In the spring of 1766, he commenced "housekeeping" in his house in New Windsor village, and there his son Charles was born in 1767, and his son Dewitt, in 1769. After the death of his father in 1773, James removed to the homestead in Little Britain, and remained there during the Revolution. The only question at issue we believe to be whether James resided in New Windsor village, and that is apparently settled by letters from his father, dated at Little Britain and addressed to Capt. James Clinton at New Windsor, covering the date of DeWitt's birth, and by the facts stated in regard to the house and the business in which James was engaged. During the Revolution the house was occupied, at least a part of the time, as a hospital. It stands on the west side of the road near the foot of New Windsor hill, and although it has been repaired and changed somewhat, has still the original frame work of its first construction.

Presbyterian Church and Cemetery.—The only church in the village—the New Windsor Presbyterian church—was organized Sept. 14, 1764. Its history is given elsewhere. Attached to it is a cemetery, in which repose the remains of many of the early residents, not only of the village but of the surrounding district.

* A periauger was the old Spanish pirogue which found its way to the Hudson with the Dutch. It was pointed at both ends, had two masts, but no bowsprit. When horses and carriages were to be loaded they were detached and lifted into the boat or driven over wide gang-planks.

CHAPTER IV.

LITTLE BRITAIN.

The boundaries of the district known as Little Britain have never been very accurately defined. Not unlike ancient New Windsor, which is said to have extended twenty miles on the Hudson, when it was but little more than two, it has been written that Little Britain embraced the entire country bounded east by the village of New Windsor, west by Montgomery, north by Newburgh, and south by Blooming-Grove, including part of the latter, as well as of Montgomery and Hamptonburgh as now constituted. These traditional boundaries are not without probability, if they are considered as representing the radius of the settlements more or less intimately associated with those made on the patent to Andrew Johnston, but the latter must be accepted as not only the center of the district, but the seat of the name. This patent lies west of the Little Britain church. The main road, leading from New Windsor to Goshen, runs nearly through the center of it. Beginning at the church, it extends west to the road that leads to the farm now owned by James Getty (opposite the residence of Joseph B. Burnet). On the south it is bounded by the south lines of the farm late of John S. Bull, and the farm now owned by Peter and George Welling. The north lines of the farms late of Joseph H. Howell, Jarvis Knap, and the heirs of John R. Scott, form its north boundary. It is one hundred chains in width and two hundred chains in length, and is supposed to contain two thousand acres. Its north and south lines now run about north twenty-two degrees east. * The patentee ran a division line through the center of the patent, north and south and sold it in lots or farms to different persons.

The first purchaser and settler on the patent was John Humphrey, who located on the north part west of the division line, on the farm late of Joseph H. Howell, in the year 1724. The next purchaser was Peter Mullinder (as the name was then spelled) in 1729, whose farm-lot of 250 acres adjoined Humphrey on the south. Mullinder was an Englishman by birth, and is said to have been connected with the nobility of his native country. He came to New York as an attache of Gov. Cornbury. With warm affection for his birth-place he named his settlement Little Britain, and from him and his farm the title was accepted, and extended not only to the patent, but to the district. It will be admitted, of course, that the honor of conferring the name has been given to Charles Clinton; but without authority; on the contrary, Clinton was the last man who had regard for Britain in any of its aspects. He was of Irish birth and an exile, and had he had a name to bestow would not have selected one so suggestive of many of his misfortunes. It may be added here, that the habit of ascribing credit to Clinton to the sacrifice of his neighbors and of truth, has been altogether too common. He was an excellent citizen, perhaps of better education than his contemporaries, and certainly more eminent than any of them through his descendants, but it is yet to be ascertained that he contributed more than his share to planting and development of Little Britain. But this digression anticipates. Robert Burnet purchased 200 acres of the patent in 1729; his farm adjoined that of Peter Mullinder. John Reid, the father-in-law of Burnet, purchased a farm-lot at the same time. Charles Clinton, Mrs. McClaughry, Alexander Denniston, and John Young were next in order of settlement in 1731, and they found at that time the neighborhood and the name of Little Britain.

* The boundaries of the patent, and many of the points of its history herein stated, have been furnished for this work by Joseph B. Burnet, Esq., an accurate surveyor and for many years supervisor of the town.

Whence came the name of Little Britain, and what was Mullinder's traditional connection with the nobility? Perhaps both questions are answered by saying that he was probably a native of London and a resident at birth or subsequently of Little Britain, or Bretagne street, in that city. Of this street Washington Irving wrote:

"Little Britain, or Bretagne Street, was so called on account of the ancient residence of the dukes of Bretagne. The earls and dukes of Bretagne, who were English subjects, were Alan the Red, earl of Bretagne, who married Constance, daughter of William I. His son, Alan the Black, Stephen, his brother, who founded the abbey of St. Mary, at York. Alan, Conan le Petit, Geoffrey Plantagenet, fourth son of Henry II. who married Constance, daughter of Duke Conan; their son was the unfortunate Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, presumptive heir to the crown of England, but prevented by murder, through the means of his uncle, King John. The dukes of Bretagne, afterwards removed within the city wall, and ultimately to the Savoy palace, in the Strand. The mansion, it is said, stood near St. Botolph's Church. In this street was also the house of the lords Montague, in the reign of James I. still known by the name of Montague Court. The earls of Peterborough, in the reign of Charles I., etc. also had their residence near St. Bartholomew's Hospital. The street has also been remarkable for booksellers. It appears that in 1664, no less than four hundred and sixty pamphlets were published in Little Britain, in the short space of four years. The booksellers have all fled; for not one of the profession exists here at present."

Mullinder was a member of the Church of England, and is said to have been somewhat positive in his views. A half-acre of his farm he set apart for the erection of an English church, and another half-acre for a burial ground, on the Little Britain road, west of the Little Britain church. The church was never erected; the burial ground contains the remains of many of the early settlers of the district. A school was added to the neighborhood in 1735; the building which it occupied being also used for religious worship at occasional times. The more active "Dissenters" of the neighborhood united with the Bethlehem and the Wallkill churches; those of the Church of England with St. David's, in Hamptonburgh. Presbyterianism, in some of its classifications, was the predominant religious element of the district, and was ultimately mainly consolidated in the Associate Reformed church at Little Brittain, although the Clintons maintained their connection with the church at Bethlehem. Agreeing very generally in their religious views, they were also remarkable for the uniformity of their political convictions. The names of but few who were Tories or King's men in the Revolution, has not been preserved.

The representative leader of the rebellion in New York, George Clinton, there found his most earnest followers. Liberty boys abounded; Liberty poles were elevated; the Square was baptized with the name of Liberty; public records conclusively show that, in proportion to population, more officers and privates entered the Revolutionary service from Little Britain than from any other district in the state. Indeed, the district was intensely disloyal, and while in adjoining districts adherents to the King were bold and defiant, they shrunk away from the firm grasp of the patriots of Little Britain.

The Square.—By some now called Washington Square, is a part of Little Britain, although not completed in the town of New Windsor. Its name is from the fact that the public roads run in such a direction as to form a diamond-shaped enclosure, as seen in the diagram, in which a is the road to Newburgh, b to Goshen, c to Little Britain, and d to New Windsor. At the outbreak of the Revolution it received the name of Liberty Square, a title by which it is designated on Clinton's map of the town in 1798. The appellation is said to have been bestowed from the fact that there was not living on any one of the four roads a single person whose disloyalty was questionable.

The rare old tales that rare old men have related of Little Britain and its people, have illustration from the pen of the late Hon. Edward McGraw, of Plymouth, Wisconsin, in the following:

Recollections.—"My recollections of Little Britain, traditional and personal, are so largely identical with the Clintons that I cannot avoid referring to them first in my notes. I had about completed my sixth year when General Clinton died, but, as my parents resided only a mile from his residence, I had the opportunity of seeing him frequently. Only on one occasion, however, was his personal appearance so distinctly impressed upon my mind that it remains still in a tolerable state of preservation. On the occasion referred to he and his lady came to the vicinity of our house in a carriage. After tying his horse he took out his surveying instruments, and, I had never seen any thing like them before, they attracted by attention very much. He observed my curiosity, and was good enough to let me examine his compass. When he struck his staff in the earth and began to take sight over it, I thought it at least a very strange proceeding. Notwithstanding his kindness in permitting me to look at his instruments, he had no power of attraction for my child-nature. Had it not been for his staff and compass, I would have avoided him. I fancy I can see now, in the picture of his son, DeWitt, the same intellectual sternness that repelled from the father. He was a tall, erect old man, and according to the fashion of the day with old men, his hair was tied in a cue and hung down between his shoulders. Many of the old gentlemen of that day wore knee breeches, but I think he wore pantaloons. His lady, who accompanied him on this occasion, appeared and was much younger than himself. She was still less attractive for me than the General. I feared him—I disliked her. I saw her very often in years after her husband's death, but the first impression was never obliterated. It is unnecessary, I suppose, to say the lady I speak of was his second wife. She was a widow (Mrs. Gray) and had several children when the General married her. Of her children I remember only one, John Gray, who was killed by the falling of a tree in 1816. She is said to have had a wonderful influence over the General and controlled him to do her will on all occasions. Of the truth of this, of course, I know nothing. General Clinton had five children by her; but I remember nothing of any of them save his son, James G. Clinton, who married a daughter of Joshua Conger, of Montgomery, by whom he had one son, DeWitt, who was killed in the Walker filibustering expedition in Nicaragua. Mrs. Clinton moved to Newburgh, after the General's death and died there. From a letter from the late Major Chas. H. Sly (1874) I learn that one of her daughters by General Clinton, was named Caroline and married a Mr. Dewey; one, Letitia, married Dr. Bolton, of Newburgh; another, Anna, married Lieut. Ross, of West Point, and the fourth died unmarried. The General had four sons by his first wife, Mary DeWitt, and several daughters. I do not know anything about the latter. His sons were Alexander, who died while acting as private secretary for his uncle, Governor George Clinton ; Charles, who was a lawyer of some repute and married a Mulliner ; DeWitt, the leading statesman of his time, and George, who died young, but not without political distinction.

"The old Clinton homestead—I refer to the residence of Colonel Charles Clinton, the immigrant—consisted, when I first remember it, of a somewhat narrow, long strip of land. On the east end of the strip was the family residence, and also the family cemetery. The house consisted of five buildings erected at different times. The first was of stone and rough boards and consisted of one large room, fifteen or twenty feet square, with two windows and a door in front, and a window and door in the rear. A large fire-place and chimney occupied the north end of the room, and an open chamber covered the whole to the roof. To this was added a building on the right with one door and three windows, and subsequently a kitchen was put on. Then followed an addition to the original building on the left, two stories; and lastly an addition on the extreme left. The latter was erected in 1761,* and was regarded as of a superior class in its day. It had a piazza on three sides, and was of good finish. I learn that the present owner (1874), Mr. Bull, has torn down all but the center building, using the latter as an ice house. "To what base uses may we come at last." The house stood a few rods west of a small creek that comes from the north, crosses the road and follows the valley south to the Otterkill. It was considerable of a stream when the country was new, but don't amount to much now, I am told. East of the road and nearly opposite the old buildings, the land rises to quite a hill, on the highest part of which Col. Clinton laid out a burial plot for himself and his relatives. I am told that Col. James G. Clinton, in his time, had a substantial stone and mortar wall built around that part enclosing the Clinton family. A number of neighbors and friends were buried there, among others, Col. Geo. Deniston and his wife, Mary (daughter of Patrick McClaughrey). Before the fence was commenced, Col. James G. asked the relatives of those buried there to unite with him and extend the wall so as to enclose all the graves, but they refused to contribute. Nearly all the marks of graves on the outside of the wall have since disappeared. It was some years after his death that Col. Charles Clinton's resting place was marked by an engraved stone. Two stones in the yard, procured by the old Colonel, one for his sister and one for his daughter, were quaint enough. I learn that the remains of the Clintons have recently been removed.*

"The subject of DeWitt Clinton's birth-place comes up in my mind. He was born in 1769, at the residence of his father, General James, who then resided with his father, Colonel Charles. General James built the house where he died, on the road leading from Newburgh to Goshen. Frank Mulliner now owns it. It was built about the commencement of the present century. My grandfather, Edward Miller, was the mechanic. I am aware that the statement that DeWitt was born at the old homestead has been disputed in Mr. Eager's "History of Orange County," on the authority of Mr. Gumar, of Deerpark, who endeavors to make his readers believe that Mrs. Clinton left her comfortable home at the most inclement season of the year, and traveled over forty miles of the necessarily illy constructed roads of that period, including mountain passes and bridgeless streams, only two or three weeks before her confinement; that she was prevented from returning home, by a severe snow storm, until after the birth of her child, DeWitt. I have to say that not only do I reject the story as improbable, but assert that no such idle tale ever had currency in Little Britain. Many of the old people residing in the immediate neighborhood—ladies proverbial for their knowledge of all such matters—have I heard converse on the subject, and if so singular an occurrence was the fact, I should certainly have learned it. These old people always referred to the old homestead as the place where DeWitt was born. It is not improbable that Alexander, the oldest brother of DeWitt, was born in Deerpark, but in that case Mrs. Clinton did not travel forty miles—she had not then removed from Deerpark. I might give a score of names of the oldest residents in the neighborhood whom I have consulted specially on this subject, and their uniform testimony is that DeWitt was born at the place I have stated.

"The farm next west of the Clinton homestead was that on which General James Clinton resided at the time of his death; and the farm next on the west was one to which Edward Miller and his wife, Susan Buchanan, had some sort of title. These were my maternal grandparents. About the time of my birth they left there and located on a

* The remains of the Clinton family were removed from the grounds in the summer of 1876, and deposited in Woodlawn Cemetery, by James A. C. Gray, of New York. A substantial monument was also erected by him.

 Edward Miller was born in Dublin, and served an apprenticeship there as a carpenter. He came to New Windsor before the Revolution; was one of the signers of the Revolutionary pledge, and was in the battle at Fort Montgomery, in Col. McClaughrey's regiment, in 1777. He was a man of some refinement; he was a good violinist and an excellent penman. He married a daughter of Robert Buchanan, and was the grand-father of Hon. Edward McGraw, by whom these recollections were written.

smaller piece of land further west of the old place. There they both died in 1809; and during the war of 1812, my father and mother, Thomas McGraw and Elizabeth Miller, bought the farm of the other heirs and lived there until 1830, when the whole family emigrated to Michigan. Between the death of my grand-parents and the purchase of the property by my parents, Thomas Gourley got possession of it, as I was told, by purchase; he cut off all the valuable timber, but failed to pay for the land. West of my father's farm was one on which William Cross and family resided. The next occupant was Alexander Falls. West of this was a farm of about one hundred acres occupied by James Strachan and his wife. Mrs. Strachan claimed some relationship to the General and expected to receive the farm from him, but his will only gave her a life interest in it. Mrs. Clinton had the credit of changing the General's intentions in the matter, but the gossips were probably mistaken. Mrs. Strachan was a worthy woman; she died probably fifty years ago. Her daughter, Mary, married James Martin, of Little Britain, and when I left the county he kept a tavern in an old stone building on Colden street, before or afterwards known as Gardner's tavern.

"About eighty rods (I measure from memory) from General Clinton's new house, on the road to Newburgh, another road left the main highway (and does yet) and ran westward along the line of the Clinton property. As the Newburgh road ran a little to the west of south, the two roads formed a somewhat acute angle. The extreme northeast point of this angle was not occupied, but left open as commons. On the extreme end of it, the General planted a red freestone land-mark, on which he had cut his initials, J. C., and the passage from the Bible: "Cursed be he who removeth his neighbor's land-mark." This anathema inspired the good people of Little Britain with much caution in driving their teams around the corner. Although the open triangle was driven over every day in the year, not one blundering wheel touched the interdicted stone up to the year 1830. From my earliest recollection it was called the "cursed stone," and the triangle was familiarly known as the "cursed corner."

"South of the open space, on the Newburgh road, a store was kept by Thomas McClelland; the place is still known as McClelland's corners. His wife was a sister to General Clinton's second wife, Mrs. Gray, and their house and little store and several acres of land were donated to them by the General. This act of generosity was charged to Mrs. Clinton's account, with more justice perhaps than her presumed interference in Mrs. Strachan's case. Mrs. McClelland was a quick-tempered, nervous lady. She was generally esteemed by her neighbors, and had an excellent family. John McClelland, of Newburgh, was her son.

"The little piece of land occupied by the McClelland family, with what I have described before, covers the whole Clinton tract, save one acre deeded to my father in trust for myself, by my grand-father, Edward Miller, on the day of my birth, in compliment for my name, and half an acre on the opposite side of the road owned by Janet McNeely. My acre was situated on the corner of a road then running south from the residence of William Sly, and the road leading from the Newburgh and Goshen road to the village of Montgomery. My claim to it was respected by General Clinton, when my grand-father removed from the place, and my father afterward sold it to William McDowell and gave me the price when I became of age. James Shaw now owns the farm my great-grandfather, Robert Buchanan, raised his family on, adjoining the old Clinton farm on the south.

"One of my father's near neighbors was Major William Sly. He was the youngest son, I think, of the Irish immigrant who settled on the land his son William owned when I first remember him.* He had brothers, Samuel and John—the latter was dead when I first remember anything about them. John, before his death owned the eastern portion of the farm his father had settled on. William owned the west end. The whole laid from half a mile to a mile and a half west of the Newburgh and Goshen road, and joined the Clinton tract on the south. John Sly's widow lived on the farm until I was quite a large boy. The family consisted of John, Letitia, Catharine, Janet, Hamilton, Robert and William. There was another member of the family—Jenny, an old, faithful and very respectable woman, who was a slave. Every Sunday, when the weather was not inclement, the widow and family passed our house on their way to the Walkkill church, or as many old people called it, the Wallakill church. Like the majority of the farmers in those days, Mrs. Sly and her family went to church in a two-horse farm wagon. Herself and the driver (generally one of her sons) took the front seat; then the balance of the white portion of the family were ranged in couples on kitchen chairs, and in the rear of all, "Aunt Jenny," the slave. A few of the more wealthy farmers went to church in a two-wheeled covered carriage called a chair; but Mrs. Sly's mode and the manner of placing the passengers was the common way of going to church in the neighborhood, and may be related in connection with other families.

"William Sly, "the Major," as he was always spoken of, was quite a leading man in the neighborhood. He married Nancy Barber, a member of another family of early immigrants, Patrick Barber. They had three children, Charles H., Arthur B. and Maria. The last married a Dill. Charles, like his father, was called "the Major," for many years before his death. He was in the military service in the war of 1812, and his father was engaged in the war of the Revolution. The "old Major" was one of the old men of my childhood that I liked to be with, and his wife, Aunt Nancy, was a genial old lady. Major Sly was always active at public meetings, Fourth of July celebrations, etc. He was a good speaker, though some accused him of an endeavor to be too ornate, and with using too many adjectives.

"On the Goshen road, about eleven miles from Newburgh, was a tavern called the Rock Tavern, which was for many years a place of resort for the people of the surrounding district, both for local gatherings and public meetings. On one occasion, when it was owned by John Kerr, the neighbors held a Fourth of July celebration there. Kerr was captain of a uniformed company of artillery in the district, and as his tavern was selected for the celebration, his artillery company was naturally brought out and formed a conspicuous part of the show. Major Sly was officer of the day. A committee of arrangements sat in the parlor of the hotel on one side of a hall which opened on a stoop on the second story. Captain Kerr's company was drawn up on the rock in front of the house, with its cannon ready to assert the patriotism of its owners. All seemed to be anxiously waiting for some expected event, when Major Sly appeared on the stoop and, after waving a flag as a signal of attention, said: "Captain Kerr, I am ordered, sir, by the committee of arrangements, to request you to have thirteen rounds fired from the democratic muzzle of your republican cannon!" The cannon immediately responded, the people huzzaed, and the Major retired as he came.

"Another old man who was quite familiar with our family was John Kelso. He was sometimes called Captain Kelso. He once had command of a sloop on Hudson's river. "Uncle John" was a man whom children avoided, not on account of any mental stateliness, but in obedience to his own wish not to be "bothered with young ones." Rough as a native diamond, he was a diamond indeed. No man had a kinder heart than he, though he would accompany his acts of generosity with: "Here, take that, and don't bother me again!" Kelso was by birth an Irishman, as were nearly all of the people in the neighborhood. The entrance to his farm was by a private road opposite the residence of Robert Burnet. He married Betsey Buchanan, a daughter of Robert Buchanan.* He had three children—Polly, Elkhanna, and James, all now dead. I believe some of his descendants now reside in Walden. They were a noble family.

"Another family that comes to me from the past was named Morrison, William and John were the old stock of that neighborhood. They were natives of the Emerald Isle, and succeeded in accumulating much property for that day. John kept a tavern and distillery on the Goshen road about ten miles from Newburgh, and after him two of his sons successively continued the business. They were leading men in the town, the church, and the Masonic lodge. John was a strong Federalist, and one of the fields on his farm was called the "Jayite field," from the fact that the Federal party once held a grand celebration there in honor of the election of John Jay to the office of Governor.

"I think I am correct in saying that the old stock of Little Britain were very orthodox, in the Calvinistic understanding of that word. They were also very intolerant. The Westminster catechism was taught in the public school that I attended, to the exclusion, most of the time, of the English grammar. There was only one Methodist family in the neighborhood, Stephen Woolsey, and his child, Elijah, was taunted by playmates with his parents' heresy. Methodism, then, was held in about the same repute that Spiritualism is now. Camp meetings were believed to be places of debauchery and wickedness which all Calvinistic parents would not permit their young people to attend; prayer meetings were held to be an abomination, and the thought that any one should be "converted" at one of them was a constant nightmare to the faithful of other faiths. Although this ancient prejudice has somewhat softened, I believe that the sect of the Wesleys' has never taken a very deep root in Little Britain.

"From a period long before my birth, Andrew King occupied the pulpit of the Wallkill (or Goodwill) church; he died during my boyhood. Soon after his death his place was supplied by a clergyman named Gray. Mr. Gray was liked very much at first, and it was supposed that he would be installed as pastor. Some of the more critical members, however, ascertained in some way that he was a Hopkinsian. This was terrible. A heterodox wolf had crept into the fold of Andrew King and might devour some of his lambs. The story was whispered around at first, but rapidly gained voice. Mr. Gray had a powerful party in the church who denied the charge most vehemently. The quarrel became intense, and friends and even families were divided. The members of the congregation in western Little Britain were parties to it, and it was only ended by the withdrawal from the church of Mr Gray's friends, who organized the "Berea" church. Mr. Gray left the field, however, before the new church was completed.*

*Buchanan was an early settler. His name was spoken as if written Bo-hon-on, the h distinctly aspirated. He was a soldier under Charles Clinton in the old French war. He was killed by the falling of a tree chopped by his son William and a man named Beattie. He owned the farm now owned by James Shaw, as stated elsewhere.

"I never heard the attempt made to explain Hopkinsianism but once, and that was by an old gentleman, John Chambers, who had a farm and blacksmith shop a little way from Morrison's tavern. I speak of Mr. Chambers respectfully, for he and his family have, I think, passed away. He was a warm opponent to Mr. Gray and of Hopkinsianism. Some of the Gray party was ill-natured and charged that the longer Chambers tarried at Morrison's the more vehement he became in his opposition. I will not say this, but it happened that, on one occasion he had evidently visited that source of theological and political inspiration. He was talking with Hector King, and the latter, not taking much interest in the matter, wanted to get away. At length he said: "Chambers, you are very abusive of Mr. Gray and of Hopkinsianism, now I wish you to tell me what is the peculiar heterodoxy of that faith; in what does it differ from what we all believe?" "Certainly," said Chambers, "if you do not know I will tell you." Bracing himself against the fence and throwing out his tobacco, he continued: "Well, you know that Adam fell, and Jesus Christ came to save all who would believe on him. Well, Hopkinsianism comes from Hopkins; he believed"—"What did he believe?" asked King; Chambers having stopped to take in a supply of tobacco. "Well," said Chambers, "I can't say that I can tell that off just like a minister; all I have to say is, damn Hopkinsianism!"

"James Scrimgeour was a good, honest old Scotch minister. I remember him well. He occupied the pulpit of Little Britain church for a good many years. He was wont to appear before his congregation with a pure white vest upon him, each pocket of which he would have filled with Scotch snuff. He would commence his sermon in a calm and guarded enunciation, couched in excellent English. Little by little, he warmed up, and as he warmed he would draw from his pocket an immaculate white handkerchief and into it would empty the contents of his nose. Then his right-hand thumb and finger would convey a quantity of snuff from the right vest pocket to his right-hand nostril; then his left-hand thumb and finger would follow suit from the left pocket and supply his left nostril. Then he would speak with more earnestness and with a Scotch accent. Presently and successively frequent the same operations would be repeated, and in the end we would have a shower of snuff and broad Scotch, and a vest and a handkerchief the color of which I will not attempt to describe. I remember them much better than I do his sermons, which were decidedly doctrinal.

"The people of Little Britain were much more addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks, in old times, than at present. While wines and brandies had some use, whiskey, or "apple brandy," was the stimulant of the great majority. Joseph I. Houston was the only "teetotaller" that I knew when a boy. At a comparatively late day, Stephen Rapalje moved into the neighborhood and cut his hay without having liquor on the field. This was denounced as barbarous and mean at the time, but has many followers now. From the cradle to the grave, and at the grave, the use of liquors was considered indispensable. It was fed to infants, and taken daily by children, as well as by men and women; and the only time I was intoxicated in my life, was at a funeral where I partook of what had been left in the glasses of those who had taken part in the exercises of the occasion.

"True to an education common to all nationalities, many of the old people were firm believers in witches, ghosts, and all other inhabitants of the invisible world so well known and so often seen in Ireland and Scotland. There was one spot in particular, in our neighborhood, around which, in the opinion of old and young, four troubled spirits perambulated nightly, and were said to be often seen by several old men on their way home from "Morrison's," and whose powers of vision were apparently intensified by the lateness of the hours of their stay at that place of resort. The story had its origin in fact. "Old Mrs. Perry," (that is the only name I ever heard for her), and three grand-children, occupied a miserable cabin, in the last quarter of the last century, situated in one of my grandfather's fields, on an eminence which was long known as "Perry's hill." It had not been cultivated for many years, when I first knew it, and had grown up to a second growth of red oak trees from four to six inches in diameter. A perpendicular slate rock, about four feet high, carried the marks of the fire-place against it for a long time after the cabin was removed, and three or four rods from it were the graves of the old lady and the children, nameless and unknown. The tradition about them was that their blood ran in no ones veins in the country. They were aliens, and strangers, and miserably poor, and depended principally on the charity of the neighborhood for support. In the cold winter of 1779-80, there was one storm of great violence which lasted several days. The snow fell to an unusual depth, and exceeding cold winds banked it up in heaps, in some places six and eight feet. It was one or two days after the subsidence of the storm before the neighbors could dig their way out, and when this was done they thought of the woman and children. Their good intentions came too late; when they reached the cabin its inmates were found lying together, on their bed, dead. The storm had been kind to them in its unkindness by removing them from charities which were even colder than its searching blasts. The Grandmother lay with her arm and part of her body over them, as if trying to lend them the warmth of her body to preserve their lives. There was sympathy enough for the poor things when it was no longer needed; and it is not improbable that many felt a little twitching of conscience at the manner in which they had neglected their duty to them. Be this as it may, the popular belief was that the spirits of the frozen dead came with troubled face to the cabin window, and that the moaning cries of the helpless sufferers were heard by ears that never listened to them while they were in life.

*A very great reform has overtaken the district in this respect. The Rev. James M. Dickson, a pastor of Goodwill Church, in his historical sermon, says: "The study of the period covered by our narrative shows that as the generations have come and gone there have been great advances in morality. The records of the early sessions and other church courts show that a vast amount of discipline had to be exercised in consequence of drunkenness and more heinous sins. Now it is a rare thing, with all the evil that is abroad, to find a call for such action on account of flagrant vices. Verily there has been progress."

"My own boyish head was full of the story, which, though old, was new to me, and I very naturally kept pretty clear of "Perry's hill." After my apprenticeship began, I scouted my owardice. Ghosts? There could be no such thing! In this happy frame of mind, I started one night to visit my parents. I was on foot and alone, and before I reached the hill, along whose base the road ran, it was quite dark. It was a cold autumn evening; the fields and forests were stripped of their verdure; the dead leaves cracked under my feet; all my surroundings were suggestive of the wailing ghosts that were said to nightly walk hand in hand around their place of bodily sepulture. As I neared the grave-spot, I became wonderfully conscious of some unnatural presence; I dared not look to the right or the left; every sound startled me. I knew I was not afraid, and yet

"The cudgel in my nieve did shake—

Each bristled hair stood like a stake."

"I reasoned with myself in vain; the argument against the possibility of ghosts was good, but my nature was very weak. In the midst of my mental debate, came the sound, 'Who!', and then a chuckling sound above my head, and a seemingly responsive voice howled upon the air, 'Whoof! Whoof! Hoo!' For an instant I was without power to move—the blood fled in a torrent to my heart. Though in a moment I knew that my alarmant was an owl, it took hours to regain my composure. The ghosts have doubtless been forgotten in the neighborhood, but I shall ever remember my experience on that occasion.

"When one looks over the beautiful fields of Orange County at the present day and compares them with what they were seventy years ago, will not fail to accord credit to the present generation of farmers. After having helped to settle three new states, I must give it as my opinion that my native town required more energy and heroism to reclaim it from the wilderness than any locality west of the Alleghany Mountains. In looking over the smooth prairies and easily subdued forests of the west, and glancing back to the stony, rocky hard soil of dear old Little Britain, one must wonder how men could have had the heroism to undertake the building of homes there, especially with such limited implements as were then in use and at their command. Even in my day, a hundred years after its settlement, the farms were rough, the farming implements rude, and the people generally poor. I have seen many a harvest cut with sickles, and men and women engaged in using them. 'Cradles,' it is true, were used as long ago as I can remember, but very few were owned in the old neighborhood, and very few knew how to use them or cared to learn. They were not generally liked; cradling was called a wasteful slovenly way of gathering grain. The principal crop was Indian corn; that and grass gave food for cows and pigs; butter and pork were the staple exports. The first patent plow in the neighborhood was brought there by Samuel W. Wood. It was Tice's or Freeborn's, I don't remember which; it was received with great caution by the farmers as a thing that would soon break to pieces. Of iron-tooth harrows there were a few; but most people preferred those of wood teeth, as a break could be more early repaired. It was very common to see rye covered, after it was sown, by a bush top. There was no talk then about the ten hour system. Farm hands were up at daylight and worked as long as they could see in the evening. The women milked the cows and performed a great deal of slavish labor, perhaps not to their discredit or special discomfort—it was a part of their life. Threshing was performed with the 'flail,' and the cleaning up was by a miserable contrivance called a fanning mill—a machine that occupied twice as much space as those now used. Every farmer did not have one, and if he could not borrow, cleaned his grain with a 'riddle' in the wind. This was considered an excellent way to quell a hurricane. Old James Strachan used to say that no matter how high the wind was blowing, it would subside when he commenced winnowing grain. Judging from the modes described in the Bible, the mechanism of agriculture had made very little progress in four thousand years.

"The economy of the people of Little Britain cannot be fully described or appreciated now. Our clothing was all manufactured from flax and wool grown on the farm. There were young women who went from farm to farm to spin and weave woolen, but the flax was spun by the women of the house. Some of the female weavers found good husbands in their travels. The economy of expenditures for clothing, was carried into the general supplies of the table. Tea without sugar, was served in the morning, and in most cases butter also; boiled pork and vegetables made the dinner, and suppawn and milk was the evening diet. There were exceptions, but such was the general rule. Well, we have gone on beyond all these things now.

"The Newburgh and Goshen road, at the commencement of the century, was a thoroughfare of great importance. The products of western Orange, as well as of portions of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, passed over it, either to the Newburgh or New Windsor sloops. I have seen many a Jersey wagon on the road, loaded with butter and pork and grain drawn by six horses. This commerce, with the help of the inhabitants along the way, supported a great many public houses, the principal of which in our neighborhood were Morrison's and the Rock Tavern. The latter was the oldest. I have been told that John Humphrey, Jr., started it as early as 1740. John Kerr kept it when I first knew it, and afterwards John Abercrombie. The latter had been a merchant in Newburgh, and had become wealthy. He became enamored with Margaret MacNeely, a poor but very beautiful sewing girl. She was the daughter of David and Janet MacNeely, of Little Britain. Abercrombie offered himself as her husband, and was accepted. After their marriage he closed his store in Newburgh and bought the Rock Tavern, to which he removed and in a few years, died. His widow subsequently married a young man named Baird and the tavern was continued under their management.

"James Palmer and his son, Charles Palmer, kept the Morrison stand and distillery for some years, and Matthew Crist the Rock Tavern. I have spoken of both of these taverns already and need not refer to them again, except it be to say that the taverns and the churches were the centers of the social and religious life of Little Britain, and the discourses of the one were duly considered at the other. The familiar faces at both places are fresh in my memory, and I stop my rambling pen in their presence as I did my tongue long years ago."

CHAPTER V.

ORANGEVILLE OR MOODNA—VAIL'S GATE, QUASSAICK VALLEY OR MORTONVILLE—HUNTING GROVE—STREAMS, ETC.

Moodna.—The purchase and settlement of the district now known as Moodna, by Samuel and Nathaniel Hazard, who laid out there a township plot under the name of Orangeville, has already been referred to.* Their enterprise, although well undertaken, was not successful. After laying out their plot, they established a landing at Sloop Hill (a short distance below Smith's Half-way House), and erected a mill and a dwelling house, the latter more recently owned by Nathaniel Sands, and the former, after many conversions, now constituting a manufactory of linen goods by Whiteside Brothers.

At the time of the purchase by the Hazards, the bay at the mouth of the creek had a sufficient depth of water to float vessels of the then largest class. Availing themselves of this fact, and as a part of their enterprise, they built a ship, on the bank of the creek, just north of the shore road leading to Cornwall; but, while the vessel was still on the stocks, there came an extraordinary freshet, and, the soil being a quicksand, filled up the mouth of the creek beyond the possibility of navigation for larger vessels. They succeeded in getting their vessel in the river, by the use of barrels; but the expense incurred, together with the destruction of their township plan, which was contingent upon their harbor, proved their ruin. Their mill subsequently passed to John Vanaurdal (1753); then to John Arthur, and from him to Samuel Arthur; from the latter to Joseph Horton (1778); by the executors of Horton to John and James Thorne (1789) who sold to Samuel Sackett, in May, 1803. Sackett sold to Lawrence & Van Buren in 1813; the latter to Wyckoff & Van Buren. William B. Leonard purchased it in 1845, and converted it into a cotton factory, and run it as such up to 1860. The Whiteside Brothers purchased in 1862, and changed its machinery to the manufacture of linen goods, but without success. During its occupancy by Sackett, and subsequently under Lawrence & VanBuren, it had a very extensive patronage, and it was not an unfrequent occurrence to see a line of wagons a half-mile long, waiting their turn to unload wheat at its door.

* Ante, p.

The wharf which the Hazard's constructed proved also, in the hands of their successors, a profitable venture. No little commerce was carried on from it as late as 1845, the shipments being mainly the products of the flouring mill and of other manufacturing establishments, for which the valley became noted in later years and which will presently be noticed. That part of the property which passed to Nathaniel Sands was occupied by him for many years, during a considerable portion of which he conducted a cider mill and distillery. In the same vicinity Britton Moore had a tannery—subsequently continued by Mr. Delamater, who also established a rope-walk and a saw and a plaster mill.

Among the earliest settlers in the valley was Samuel Brewster, who built a saw-mill on the north side of the creek, just below the bridge at the foot of Forge-Hill, and also (1755) a dwelling immediately opposite, now commonly known as the Williams house, and traditionally recognized as the headquarters of General Lafayette. The mill soon gave place to a forge and anchor shop, known as Brewster's forge, at which, during the Revolution, a considerable portion of the chains were made which were used to obstruct the navigation of the river at Fort Montgomery and at West Point. The site of the old forge can easily be traced by the cinders and debris which are turned up by the plow.

A short distance east from the Brewster house, or Williams house, was a flouring mill erected by Jonas Williams, and subsequently conducted by himself and sons (1794) under the name of Jonas Williams & Co. Jonathan and Jacob Morrell came into its possession at a later period; they engaged in the manufacture of cut nails, and carried on a very extensive business. Caleb and Thomas Williams succeeded the Morrells, and engaged in the manufacture of snuff, which they sold from their wagons throughout the country. Roil & Storm were the next owners; to the business of snuff manufacture they added that of fine-cut tobacco. The next proprietor was Mrs. Miller, whose "Rose-leaf Snuff and Tobacco," enjoyed a world-wide fame and gave her a fortune. In the prosecution of her business rose leaves were of course a necessity, to supply which she planted four acres with the variety known as the Philadelphia rose. The lot on which the planting was made is still known, but the roses and their fragrance have passed away. Mrs. Miller's business was continued for some years by her son-in-law, Andrew H. Mickle, who was at one time mayor of the city of New York.

About 1843, Leonard, Hone & Nicoll put up a factory for the manufacture of cotton goods on the site now occupied by the paper mills. The first story was of brick and the two upper, frame. In September, 1845, it was destroyed by fire. In 1847, it was rebuilt wholly of brick and run by Mr. Hazelhurst, for a few years, as a shoddy mill. In 1850, the property was purchased by D. Carson & Co., formerly of the Carson mills in Massachusetts (David and David F. B. Carson and Eratus Ide), and converted into a paper mill, to which use it has since been devoted, with some changes in the proprietorship. It is now owned by James P. Townsend, of Newburgh and is the only prosecuted manufacturing industry in the ancient township of Orangeville.

The hamlet has a post office under the name of Moodna; the school house of district No. 2 is located there, and there are a few dwellings, principally occupied by operatives in the mills. It is not impossible that in the adjustments and readjustments of manufacturing industry which are constantly going on, the now almost neglected hydraulic power of the Moodna will again be utilized.

Quassaick Valley.—The water power of the Quassaick, on the northern boundary of the town, was not employed at a very early period. The first record of its use was by Robert Boyd, Jr., who erected, in June, 1775, a forge for the manufacture of guns, bayonets, etc. He obtained a contract from the revolutionary authorities of the state, by the terms of which he was to receive "three pounds fifteen shillings, New York money, for each good musket with steel ramrod, and bayonet with scabbard." In February, 1776, he was able to write that he had "the best gunsmiths' shop in the colonies," but nevertheless its capacity was limited offered a large premium for gunsmiths to assist him, and empowered its agents in Europe to secure workmen. The first regiments organized from the difficulty in obtaining workmen.* The provincial convention in the state were mainly armed with muskets of his manufacture. At what time Boyd relinquished the business has not been ascertained, but sometime about 1800 he converted the works into a plaster mill. The next change was in 1808, when George Parker and Abner Armstrong advertised that they had "erected machines for breaking and carding wool at the plaster mill of Robert Boyd, on the road leading from New Windsor to Newburgh, one mile from each place." The property was sold by Samuel Boyd to George Reid who converted it to a paper mill. From the Reid estate it passed to John Barker, who manufactured hats. Barker sold to Benj. Carpenter, at which time it was operated by John H. Waters who manufactured woolen goods. Carpenter sold to George Crawshaw, Crawshaw to Wm. H. Beede ; Beede to Edward Haigh by whom it was operated under the title of the Valley Woolen Mills.

The second privilege (long known as Schultz's mill) was occupied by Governor George Clinton who erected a grist mill and a saw-mill. He sold to Hugh Walsh in 1790. Walsh, July 5th of that year, conveyed to Isaac Schultz thirty-two acres extending west from Hudson's River to lands of Robert Boyd, including the undivided half part of "grist mill stream of water" and land under water on the Hudson. The mill stood a short distance west of the Hudson on the east side of the old highway. In 1794 (July 6) Schultz sold to Daniel Byrnes the lot on the east including one-half of the mill building, the division line being "the middle of the post next west of the north door of said mill," including one-half of the flume, etc., and two mills were thereafter run under one roof, the proprietors being particular to say "their separate mills" in their advertisements. Isaac Schultz continued his mill until his death in 1802, when it came into the possession of his brother Jacob, who sold it to Peter Townsend. The Byrnes mill and property attached passed from Dinah Byrnes, widow of Daniel Byrnes, to Caleb Byrnes, March 12, 1799. The assignees of Caleb Byrnes sold to Richard Wimble in 1801, and it was continued by him for some years. Wimble sold to Elisha Hale in 1835, and Elisha Hale to Philip A. Verplanck in 1837. Verplanck closed the race-way and suffered the mill to decay on its foundations.

The third privilege was occupied by Hugh Walsh who retained one-half of the mill stream and the remainder of the Clinton farm not conveyed to Schultz, and who, in company with John Craig, erected in 1792, the paper mill afterward owned by his son, John H. Walsh, and now by his grandson, J. DeWitt Walsh. This mill is still in successful operation and is situated at the extreme west end of the valley.

The fourth privilege was that embraced in the purchase from Jacob Schultz by Peter Townsend and was known as the cannon foundry. This foundry was erected in 1816 on a site immediately west of the Schultz mill, and consisted of two furnaces and four boring mills.

*The deed recites the former purchase of one hundred acres from Nathan Smith by Robert Boyd and George Harris, of which this was a part. The remainder of the original purchase included the subsequent mill and residence of Boyd, the latter now the property late of Mrs. Charles H. Havemeyer.

During the Summer past, Mr. Peter Townsend has been engaged in building a cannon foundry on Chambers' Creek, just below the village. It is now in complete operation. On Wednesday last the casting of cannon was commenced.—Index, Dec. 3, 1816.

Referring to a trial of cannon cast by Mr. Townsend, the National Intelligencer of July 17, 1817, remarks: "The first cannon ever manufactured in the State of New York, and of metal and accuracy of firing were never excelled."

The enterprise was not a financial success, however, and the property passed into the possession of the U. S. Government and subsequently to John A. Tompkins about 1836, who converted it into a machine shop. Mr. Tompkins was accidentally drowned in December, 1838, and the property came into the possession of Charles Ludlow and Christopher B. Miller, from whom it passed to Mr. Sterritt, who converted it into a pin factory. This business also failed, and Joseph Longking and Aaron F. Palmer took it for the manufacture of daguerrean instruments, cases, etc., but with no better success. The last occupant was John Gray who converted it into a flour mill. While being occupied by him it was destroyed by fire. Those who remember the activity which at one time prevailed there can best appreciate the desolation that now sits with folded wings on its ruins.

West of the old Boyd mill, George Reid established a paper mill—date not ascertained. Reid died in 1837 or '38, and from his executors the property passed to John H. Walsh & Sons; from them to Samuel A. Walsh; from him to Charles H. Havemeyer; from Havemeyer's executors to Mrs. Havemeyer, and from her to Edward Haigh. This property is now the Windsor Woolen Mills, and is next east of the high bridge on Quassaick Avenue.

The last of the milling enterprises is on a site sold by John H. Walsh to Alexander Marshall; Marshall to Darlington; Darlington to Isaac K. Oakley; Oakley to Adams & Bishop. This mill has been for several years engaged in the manufacture of paper.

It may not be improper to add that on the north side of the creek (Newburgh) and near its confluence with the Hudson, Richard Wimple erected a flouring mill, in the early part of the century. He also obtained a grant of the land under water (July 30, 1811) and constructed a dock and a large cooper shop; the remains of the former are visible on the point east of the bridge. The property was purchased by Elisha Hale in 1835, and a manufacture of pumps conducted. From Hale the property passed through several parties to Homer Ramsdell, who sold to the Pennsylvania Coal Company. The mill was destroyed by fire during Mr. Ramsdell's ownership. The creek at this point was a navigable stream for small vessels and the bridge of the Newburgh and New Windsor Turnpike Company was constructed as a draw-bridge for their accommodation. West of the Trimble mill was the plot celebrated for many years under the name of "The Vale," while part of the Trimble house was shrined in tradition as the scene of the attempted betrayal of Washington to the British by one Colonel Ettrick, for which reason the place was sometimes called Ellrick Grove.*

*Hist. Newburgh, 214.

Vail's Gate.—Notwithstanding repeated efforts to change its name to Mortonville, the settlement long known as Vail's Gate retains that title in local records and in railroad connections. It is a hamlet at the junction of the New Windsor and Blooming Grove turnpikes and the Snakehill turnpike and immediately southeast of the junction of the Newburgh Branch and Shortcut railroads. The name is from Mr. Vail an old resident and for many years keeper of the gate on the Blooming Grove turnpike. For the same reason it was at one time known as Tooker's Gate. It has a school house, and a short distance east is the Vail's Gate M. E. Church. The latter is one of the oldest Methodist societies in the county, having been founded as John Ellison's class in 1789. The Edmonston house is also located here. It is referred to elsewhere.

Ragville is the title of a hamlet of half a dozen houses and a blacksmith's shop, about two miles west of the Little Britain Church. Its name came from a man named Davenport who had a store there and exchanged goods for rags. The first property beyond was formerly the famous Morrison Tavern and distillery; and further west Rock Tavern. Both of these taverns were, in early times, important factors in the social and political life of the district. The Rock Tavern takes its name from the rock on which it is erected. Company trainings were held here as well as political meetings, and it was here that the initiatory steps were taken for the organization of the present County of Orange. Both taverns were embraced in the road district known at an early date as Hunting Grove, which extended west to the Otterkill and included the settlement then known as Hunting Grove, but more recently called Buskirk's mills and now known as Burnside P. O. The name of the settlement was bestowed by Nathan Smith who established mills and a store there. A considerable portion of the district is now in the town of Hamptonburgh, while the name Hunting Grove, after the adoption of Blooming Grove by the inhabitants of that town, fell into disuse. Another of the once noted localities Stonefield, was the residence and grammar school of Rev. John Moffat, who had among his pupils some of the most noted men of earlier times.

CREEKS, STREAMS, SWAMPS, ETC.

Murderer's or Moodna Creek on the southern border of the town and Quassaick Creek on the north, are too well known to require further description than has already been given elsewhere in this work.

Silver Stream rises near the Square and is fed by a number of springs north and south of the main road. It crosses the New Windsor road at the old Alex. Fall's saw mill and from there flows in a southeast direction through what are called the "Continental Meadows," and crosses the Snakehill road north of Vail's Gate. East of this road there is another old saw mill on the Morton place, where the creek crosses the old New Windsor turnpike and supplies power to the Morton (formerly the John Ellison) grist mill. From thence flowing south it unites with Murderer's Creek. The only mill privileges on it are those that have been mentioned, of which the Morton mill is the most important. It is not a certain stream, but being fed by a water-shed of not less than two thousand acres it is quick to respond to rain falls.

Beaver Dam Creek has been claimed as the original outlet of Orange Lake. It crosses the Cohecton Turnpike between Alex. Beattie's place and the old stone house formerly owned by the Howells; runs south through New Windsor and empties into the Otterkill, west of Salisbury Mills. There were several saw mills on it in former times of which only one remains, viz: on the old Belknap farm, now owned by Robert Morrison. Thomas McDowell ("Uncle Tommy") had a grist mill on it south of the main road, where he was wont to grind feed for his neighbors without taking toll. It cannot now be ascertained what the original power of the creek was. Its claims as the original outlet of Orange Lake were disputed in the courts many years ago and a decision obtained in favor of Quassaick Creek.

Goldsmith Creek rises on the Burnet homestead in Little Britain, runs south through the old Clinton place into the Otterkill at Washingtonville.

Colemantown Creek, another small stream in the western part of the town, also flows to the Otterkill.

Big Swamp or Great Swamp is in the northwest part of the town and extends into Montgomery. It commences within a quarter of a mile of the main road in Little Britain and runs thence north to near the Cohecton Turnpike. The north part of it has been redeemed and is now under cultivation. Its outlet forms a branch of the Tinn Brook although it does not take that name until after it crosses the Cohecton Turnpike. There is little doubt that this part of the town was once filled with water presenting a pond or lake.

CHAPTER VI.

PLEDGE OF ASSOCIATION—MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS—REVOLUTIONARY INCIDENTS.

While New Windsor was the center of many events of a general character connected with the War of the Revolution, it was not less so in those that were more strictly local. It was from its bosom that the then young and vigorous George Clinton, who had made his mark in the Colonial assembly from 1768 to 1775, in opposition to the demands of the British Ministry, sprang into the leadership of the Rebellion in his native state; and although there were some who refused to follow him, the great majority of his townsmen were his firm supporters. The primary step in the Rebellion—the non-importation resolutions of the Continental Congress of 1774—was heartily approved, and in the subsequent organization of a "Committee of Safety and Observation," the action of the precinct was not uncertain. These committees, it may be observed, had their origin in New York City, so far as the province of New York was concerned, the committee of which city, of which Isaac Low was chairman, sent circulars to all the towns and precincts in the province urging similar formations and the union of the inhabitants under a common pledge of association. The records of the town state: An association for the more firm union of the inhabitants in pursuing measures for their common safety—then proceeded to nominate and elect the following persons to be a Standing Committee until the next precinct meeting:

Col. James Clinton, Capt. James McClaughry, John Nicoll, Esq., John Nicholson, Esq., Nathan Smith, Esq., Robert Boyd, Jr., Samuel Brewster, Samuel Sly, Samuel Logan.

Col. James Clinton, Capt. James McClaughry and John Nicholl, Esq., were named as delegates to represent the precinct in a convention to be held at the house of Mrs. Ann DuBois, Marlborough, to appoint delegates to the Provincial Convention at New York, May 25th."

The signatures to the Association are not recorded, nor were they returned to the Provincial Congress. Fortunately, however, they were in the main preserved by Col. James Clinton, in whose hands they were placed and were as follows:

“ The following was set on foot in the Precinct of New Windsor, in the County of Ulster, on Monday, the eighth day of May, 1775, viz :

‘ Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America depend, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety ; and convinced of the necessity of preventing anarchy and confusion, which attend the dissolution of the powers of government, we, the freemen, freeholders, and inhabitants of New Windsor, being greatly alarmed at the avowed design of the Ministry to raise a revenue in America, and shocked by the bloody scenes now acting in Massachusetts Bay, do, in the most solemn manner, resolve never to become slaves, and do associate, under all the ties of religion, honor and love to our country, to adopt and endeavor to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention for the purpose of preserving our Constitution, and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary acts of the British Parliament, until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America on constitutional principles (which we most ardently desire) can be obtained and that we will in all things follow the advice of our General Committee respecting the purposes aforesaid, the preservation of peace and good order, and the safety of individuals and property.”

In May, 1776, the Committee of Safety was changed, in consequence of the active employment of some of its members in the field. It was then composed of Samuel Brewster, Robert Boyd, Jr., Nathan Smith, Hugh Humphrey, George Denniston, John Nicoll, Col. James McClaughry, Leonard D. Nicoll and Samuel Arthur. Samuel Brewster, chairman.

The importance of this committee will be recognized when it is stated that it not only was the representative of the association but was a part of the Revolutionary Government of the province and of the precinct so far as it became necessary. The government of New York differed from that of the New England Colonies. The people of the latter, under their several charters, elected their own governors and legislatures; while those of the former had no such power, the governor being appointed by the King, and the governor's council composed of members of his selection. In New England, therefore, the revolution could be carried forward without disturbing the existing order of things, while in New York the government had to be set aside, and, as in the case of the nation, a new one created. Pending this change, common law was maintained as far as practicable, while to these committees were assigned the powers inferentially declared in the Pledge of Association: "The necessity of preventing anarchy and confusion, which attend dissolution of government," and "the preservation of peace and good order, and the safety of individuals and property. At first responsible only to the general committee of New York City, the local committees were subsequently recognized by the provincial convention and its subordinate committees of safety, and invested with the control of the minute men, and all the duties of local revolutionary administration. Precinct committees could appoint assessors and collectors, while county committees were to be "considered as supervisors" and could assess, raise and collect taxes "by distress upon the goods and chattels of the defaulters." They could also "apprehend and secure all persons" who evinced "an inimical disposition to the cause of America.

*Note.—(?) indicates uncertainty of surname; (2) that name appears twice without suffix of Jr. or Sr. The names are from the original list, found among the papers of Genl. James Clinton, chairman of the committee, now deposited in Washington's Headquarters, Newburgh. While their genuineness cannot be questioned, the completeness of the list (as showing the full number of "freemen, freeholders and inhabitants") may be, as it fails to account for many who are known to have been such at the time. It is not probable that a full return was ever made, and we are, therefore, without the names of those who refused to sign as well as of some perhaps, who did sign the Association.

It was not necessary, in New Windsor, that many of the duties of the committee should be exercised: the officers of the precinct continued to perform their accustomed duties in the interest of the revolution, leaving to the committee the arrest of those inimical and the organization of the militia. In many of the cases of arrest, the New Windsor committee acted in concert with that of Newburgh. The most important action of this character was the arrest of Cadwallader Colden, Jr., at his residence in the precinct of Hanover (now Montgomery). The story as related by himself, states that in June, 1776, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, his house was surrounded by a company of armed men, who, on being questioned, stated that they had been sent by order of the joint committee of Newburgh and New Windsor, with instructions to search his house, which they proceeded to do. Standing guard over the premises until the next day, they conducted him to the home of Mr. Jackson, in New Windsor, where he was confined twenty-four hours, although Mr. Thomas Ellison offered to become bail for his appearance. When taken before the committee he was informed that the charge against him was that of being "inimical to the American cause." He replied that while he had had convictions in regard to the duty of the people, and had expressed them at a time when he thought it possible to ward off the calamities of war, he had subsequently "entirely avoided interfering in any shape in public affairs." Given the choice of trial by the joint committee or by the county committee of Ulster, he accepted the latter, and was at once removed, under guard, to the jail at Kingston. The case was brought before the general committee at New Paltz, July 4, when, on his refusal to sign the pledge of association and also to give his pledge of honor "that he would immediately equip himself for the field of battle, and in case of actual invasion, go forth with the rest of his neighbors to action in defence of his country," he was again committed to jail. The joint committee represented on the trial, that they had made the arrest under the conviction "that the committee of the precinct of Hanover were afraid to treat Mr. Colden as he deserved ;" that although not in their district he was more contiguous to them than to the district in which he lived ; that in his original signature to the pledge of association it was evident he only meant to secure a sanctuary for his person and property ; that the protest which he had written against the appointment of delegates to the first provincial congress, was "the evil seed sown in this county from which the whole of the fruits of toryism sprung, for to their knowledge upwards of sixty persons in the precinct of Newburgh had subscribed it"*

Other reasons were stated, and especially that the pledge of association was not a pledge of neutrality, "but a firm bond of union for mutual defence, which required activity." This bond he had plainly violated. Colden remained in jail for over a year, when he was permitted to reside on parole at the house of Jacobus Hardenburgh, in Hurley.

MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

The first military organization in the district of which New Windsor now forms a part was made prior to 1738, and was known as "the foot company of military of the precinct of the Highlands." It was one of the companies of the Ulster regiment of which A. Gaasbeck Chambers was colonel.* So far as can now be identified the following members were residents of the New Windsor district, viz :

Capt. Thos. Ellison,	James Neely,	Arthur Beatty,
Ensign John Young,	John Reid,	Charles Beatty,
Sergt. P. McClaughry,	David Humphrey,	Matthew Davis,
Corp. Jas. Stingham,	James Gamble,	John Nicoll, Jr.,
Corp. Jona Hazzard,	John Gamble,	Jas. Edmeston,

Alex. Falls,	James Humphrey,	David Oliver,
Joseph Shaw,	Peter Mulinder,	John Jones,
James Young,	Robert Burnet,	Joseph McMikhill.
	Archibald Beaty,

The regiment was divided in 1756 into two regiments, of which the first embraced Kingston, etc., and the second embraced Newburgh, New Windsor, etc. The latter was under command of Col. Thomas Ellison and took part in the French and Indian war of that period. In September, 1773, it was under the following officers, viz : Thomas Ellison, colonel ; Charles Clinton, lieutenant-colonel ; Cadwallader Colden, Jr., major, and Johannes Jensen, adjutant. In 1774, Col. Ellison divided the regiment into two battalions, of which the command of the first battalion was given to James Clinton.* This was the last re-organization of the militia under authority of the English government.

On the 22nd of August, 1775, the Provincial Congress of New York passed a law under which the militia of the Revolution was organized. This law set aside the commissions and the organizations which then existed, and provided that counties, cities and precincts should be divided by their respective committees of safety, so that in each district a company should be formed " ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able-bodied and effective men, officers included, between sixteen and fifty years of age."

The companies so formed were directed to be " joined into regiments, each regiment to consist of not less than five nor more than ten companies, and the regiments were to be classed in six brigades. When the organization was perfected, the counties of Orange and Ulster formed the fourth brigade, under Brigadier-General George Clinton, and was composed of five regiments in Orange county and of four regiments in Ulster county, of which the second Ulster regiment was placed under command of James Clinton, colonel ; James McClaughry, lieutenant-colonel ; George Denniston, adjutant ; Alexander Trimble, quarter-master ; Jacob Newkirk and Moses Phillips, majors ; New Windsor was a part of the second regimental district under Colonel Clinton, and was divided into three company districts—Eastern, western and village. In the eastern district the company was organized on the 5th of October, 1775—John Belknap, captain ; Silas Wood, first lieutenant ; Edward Falls, second lieutenant ; James Stickney, ensign. The western district company was organized May 6, 1776—James Humphrey, captain ; James Kernaghan, second lieutenant ; Richard Wood, ensign. The village company was organized in 1775—John Nicoll, captain Francis Mandeville,

* " Out of respect of his family and in consideration of the long and faithful services of the deceased old gentleman, and his son, James Clinton in the Provincial service the last war."—Letter of Gov. Tryon to Col. Ellison.

Prior to the organization of these companies, a company of militia had existed in the upper part of the town and another in the lower part. The officers of the former, in May, 1775, united in the "pledge of association" of that year : "To observe and carry into execution to the utmost of our power, all and every the orders, rules and recommendations, made or to be made by the Continental or our Provisional Congress." The signatures were James McClaughrey, George Denniston, John Burnet, James Humphrey, James Paulkner, Jacob Newkirk, Richard Wood, William Telford, Samuel Logan, James Kernaghan, Alexander Beatty.

first lieutenant ; Hezekiah Winter, second lieutenant ; Leonard D. Nicoll, ensign.

The changes in the officers and membership of these companies as well as in the second regiment were quite frequent, and mainly by reason of enlistments and commissions in continental regiments. It was in this way that the command of the regiment devolved upon Lieutenant-Colonel McClaughry, who, on the 23rd of January, 1776, appointed the village of New Windsor as the place of rendezvous of his regiment in case of an alarm. From December, 1776, to May, 1778, the regiment was in service probably not less than three hundred days.* In this period was included its participation in the defence of the Highland forts (Oct. 6, 1777), where it lost, in killed, wounded and prisoners thirty-nine members, as follows :

Col. Jas. McClaughry,	Robert Barclay,
Henry M. Neely,	James Wood,
Robert Henry,	David Thompson,
William Scott,	Elias Wool,
Matthew DuBois,	William McMullen,
Francis McBride,	Isaac Denton,

A special feature in the organization of the militia under the law of 1775 was what were known as minute men. The law provided "that after the whole militia" was formed, in the manner already detailed "every fourth man of each company" should "be selected for minute men" of such persons as were willing to enter into that necessary service. The persons thus selected were to be organized in companies and elect officers, and the companies were to be organized in regiments. The plan, however, was not satisfactory in its operation, and it was abolished in June, 1776. In the meantime the provisions of the law were generally complied with. In the southern district of Ulster three companies were formed, one in New Windsor, one in Newburgh and one in New Marlborough, of which the former was organized in October, 1775—Samuel Logan, captain ; John Robinson, ensign ; David Mandeville and John Schofield, sergeants. The regiment of which they were a part was under command of Mornas Palmer, of Newburgh, colonel, and was on duty in the Highlands in the winter of 1775-'76. The principal duty of the companies, however, was in the capacity of a posse comitatus under the direction of the local committees of safety.

The first New York or "Continental" regiments as they were called, were constituted in 1775 for the term of six months. These regiments were four in number, of which the third was placed under command of Colonel James Clinton. Four companies were recruited for this regiment in Ulster county, of which one was raised by John Nicholson of New Windsor, who writes under date of July 13th : "Agreeable to my warrant and instructions from the Provincial Congress, I have enlisted a company of seventy-two men to serve in the Continental Army, and now wait for further directions of the Congress." The regiment composed part of the force engaged in the campaign against Canada in the winter of 1775-'76, where Nicholson was raised to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. On the 19th of January, 1776, a call was issued under which New York was required to furnish four battalions "to garrison the several forts of the Colony from Crown Point to the southward, and to prevent depredations upon Long Island, and to promote the safety of the whole." The command of the second battalion was given to Colonel James Clinton, and of the three companies recruited for it in Ulster county, one under command of Captain John Belknap, was raised in New Windsor, and was engaged on garrison duty in the Highlands.

In September of the same year, New York was called to furnish four battalions "to serve during the war." To the third of these battalions, under command of Colonel Peter Gunsevort, New Windsor sent one company under Captain James Greggs ; George I. Denniston, ensign. A fifth battalion was added to the number in October, under command of Colonel Lewis DuBois, of Marlborough ; Samuel Logan, of New Windsor, major, and drew no small number of recruits from New Windsor. These battalions and Colonel John Lamb's artillery were the only regiment raised in the State "for the war," and were kept in the field by levies and by recruiting for short periods to supply vacancies in their ranks. Colonel DuBois' regiment and Col. Lamb's artillery were engaged in the defence of the Highland forts in October, 1777, and suffered severely in killed, wounded and prisoners.

Necessarily imperfect as is this record, it is sufficient to show that in every military organization in the State during the revolution, that whenever the flag of the rebellion floated—whether amid the snows of Quebec or on the burning plains of Monmouth, at Fort Schuyler, Saratoga and Yorktown—New Windsor was honorably represented by her sons in its defense.

REVOLUTIONARY INCIDENTS.

The Fall of the Highland Forts.

When the general alarm occurred on the occasion of the loss of the forts in the Highlands (Oct. 7, 1777), the people of the village of New Windsor village fled into the country for safety, leaving behind them in their haste their dwellings ready for occupation either by friends or enemies, and as the result proved in many cases it made little difference which was the fortunate temporary possessor. William Bedlow writes that his family were unable to remove "several boxes and cases of China, some cases of pictures and looking glasses, several tables (one with marble slab), chairs, window curtains, some ornamental China, with images of Shakespear and Milton in plaster of Paris, and a parcel of table furniture left in the closets," for the recovery of which he subsequently advertised in vain. * Colonel Ellison, tradition says, was more fortunate. He put his money and plate under the ground in his smoke house, hung up his hams and lighted a cob fire. The hams were gone, on his return, but the treasure was safe. Governor George Clinton apparently suffered with his neighbors and perhaps to a greater extent.

* Whereas, on the 7th of October last, when the general alarm took place on the loss of our forts in the Highlands, my family removed from my house, at New Windsor, unable to carry off all my effects, by which cause a considerable quantity was left, consisting of several boxes and cases of china, some cases of pictures and looking glasses, several tables, one a marble slab, chairs, window curtains, some ornamental china, with images of Shakespear and Milton in plaster of Paris, and a parcel of table furniture left in the closets; the whole to the amount of upwards of six hundred pounds value. As the subscriber flatters himself the above effects have been removed for safety by persons at present unknown to him, if those who have them in possession will be so kind as to inform him by a line, directed to the care of Capt. James Jackson, Sen., at New Windsor, he will most thankfully acknowledge the obligation and repay any expenses they may have been at. But should any person be so base as to have taken anything from his house with design to secrete the same, they may depend, on discovery, to be prosecuted for the whole loss. A great many small articles are missing, not mentioned above.

WILLIAM BEDLOW.

Fishkill, Nov. 5, 1777.—Adv. N. Y. Packet.

From the place of refuge of his family (Little Britain) he writes under date of Dec. 1st, 1777: "I have a cot at my house out of which the militia stole the irons; will you get it repaired for me, as I have no other bed or bedstead." It will not be presumed that any of Governor Clinton's townsmen were guilty of these appropriations; but rather that they were by the class known as "skimmers" who were found in every camp and who robbed friend and foe alike.

Morgan's Riflemen.—It cannot be said, however, that the people of New Windsor village were altogether law-abiding. Under date of Aug. 7, 1775, Governor Tryon writes: "Eleven companies of riflemen, consisting of about one hundred men each, with ammunition, from the provinces of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, have lately passed through this province, crossing over Hudson's river at New Windsor, in their march to the provincial camp near Boston."* Tradition adds to this statement of fact, that just before the troops entered the village, a man, meanly dressed, but otherwise of gentlemanly appearance, called at William Edmonston's and said that Col. Morgan was coming. He went on and stopped at Mr. William Ellison's, and there said that he was Col. Morgan. The troops soon arrived and with them Col. Morgan. The deception practiced by the stranger incensed the colonel and he handed him over to his troops, who tarred and feathered him without even the form of a trial. The boys of New Windsor enjoyed the matter heartily, and had no trouble in obtaining from Mrs. Rachel Cooper (who lived in the village and sold cake and beer), a pillow of feathers for the purpose.

SEIZURE OF SALT.

An incident of a different character appears in a communication from Col. John Hathorn, of the precinct of Goshen, under date of Dec. 2d, 1776, in which he writes: "Note your memorialist had a small quantity of salt in Mr. William Ellison's store at New Windsor; that there was not more than he had engaged to his neighbors, and was obliged to keep for his own use; that a large number of men, whose names your memorialist can not discover, without any legal authority, have taken out of said store, as well the sale of your memorialist (except one bushel), as of other persons, and that your memorialist is in the greatest want of

*Col. Hist., VIII, 597. These troops were the famous Morgan Riflemen, commanded by Daniel Morgan, "a man of powerful frame and stalwart courage." A large proportion of them were Irishmen. Upon their breasts they wore the motto, "Liberty or Death." Wonderful stories of their exploits went to England; the written record of their services forms one of the brightest pages of American history.

salt for his own use; that unless a check is put to such unjustifiable proceedings, your memorialist apprehends, from the seemingly disorderly spirit at present prevailing among the common people, his property, as well as those of others, will be very insecure."

A TEA RIOT.

Tea caused more trouble apparently than salt. Capt. Jonathan Lawrence was in command of Fort Constitution; his wife remained in charge of his store in New Windsor. The Congress of New York had resolved that no person should charge to exceed six shillings a pound for tea. The local committee complained, "that Mrs. Jonathan Lawrence sold tea at eight shillings per pound, and that her husband made Fort Constitution a depot for that useless herb." The Congress replied (June 14, 1776), stating that "Capt. Lawrence, with all the commissioners at the fort, are discharged from their superintending. We are surprised at his conduct, and make no doubt you will treat him and all others according to their demerits after a fair hearing."

Tea at six shillings the people seemed determined to have. In July, 1777, James Caldwell and John Maley, of Albany, purchased tea in Philadelphia, and in transporting it had occasion to pass through New Windsor. Stopping at the tavern of Isaac Schultz for the night, the contents of their wagon was noised abroad. A mob of men and women speedily collected, and, under the plea that the tea was held at a price higher than six shillings, seized the load and sold it to themselves at that price. For the time being the town was supplied with tea. The Council of Safety of the State disapproved of the transaction, and decided that the owners of the tea "could obtain satisfaction for the injury in the ordinary court of law;" and this was all the remuneration, probably, that they ever received.

DOMINIE ANNAN.

The incidents already quoted give an inside view of life in New Windsor village. If it is not very flattering, it is at least refreshing to meet with them, as they serve to break up the current of Revolutionary literature which usually flows in the channel of patriotic devotion and heroic deeds. We turn from them, however, to our favorite district. Little Britain, where we find the following in reference to the Rev. Robert Annan of the Little Britain Church: "In the fall of 1779, the people of Rhode Island, by reason of the great scarcity of supplies and provisions, applied to our State for aid. The legislature, however, refused to send public stores, as they were needed at home. Meetings were held in several towns, for the purpose of raising supplies by subscription and among them, one in Hanover precinct. It was attended by many prudent people, who seemed to agree with the legislature, that the surplus supplies should not be sent out of the State. There was a discussion conducted with fairness and ability on both sides, but it seemed likely to be interminable. At this juncture Annan sprang up and cut the matter short by exclaiming: "As many as are in favor of assisting the people of Rhode Island and the cause of liberty, follow me!" Leaving the house he was surprised to find almost the entire assemblage at his heels."

BOY SOLDIERS.

The number of mere boys who found their way into the army was by no means inconsiderable. Lieutenant Robert Burnet and Lieut. Alexander Clinton were but fifteen years old when they were commissioned. Aside from this general fact, it is related that there was a regularly organized company of boys from twelve to fifteen years of age in Little Britain who were "soldier boys" in earnest, having been several times on duty as home guards. The Hessian prisoners from Saratoga en route for Easton, Pa., passed through Little Britain and camped at Major Telford's tavern, then opposite the Burnet homestead. The prisoners were in charge of a company of Morgan's riflemen, who, in quest of rest themselves, turned the prisoners over to the custody of the boys, who guarded them during the night. During the night one of the Hessian women died and was buried in the morning west of Major Telford's house. It was a long-remembered funeral by the boys. The woman's companion could only bury her and move on. It was a phase of war that to them was new, and for years the lone grave by the apple tree received perhaps as much regard as though its inmate had been to them kindred.

CHAPTER VII.

REVOLUTIONARY LOCALITIES.

Washington's Headquarters at New Windsor.—The headquarters of Washington at New Windsor were at the Ellison homestead, then Col. Thomas Ellison, and subsequently of his son, William Ellison. The house was torn down some years ago. It stood on the brow of the hill on the east side of the highway immediately south of the line of the village of New Windsor. Washington came here in June, 1779, and again in the fall of 1780, where he remained until the summer of 1781. The leading events in the army, during this period, were the capture of Stony Point, by Wayne, in July, 1779 and the management of the details of the campaign of 1781, which closed with the victory at Yorktown in October of the latter year.

It was while Washington was here that Cooper, in "The Spy," represents him under the name of Harper, as having crossed the Hudson at night to visit Harwey Birch in his cabin in the mountains south of Fishkill Village. It was also while here that the traditional attempt at his abduction occurred. This story which was given no little credence locally, was that he was invited to dine with one Col. Ettrick, who lived in "The Vale" on the north side of Quassaick Creek. Ettrick had not taken any part in the war, but his feelings were with the mother country. His daughter, on the other hand, was strongly enlisted in favor of the colonies. She had overheard a conversation of some tories with her father, in which it was proposed to carry off Washington as a prisoner. Soon after this her father invited him to dine, and she, suspecting that the plan was then to be consummated, went to Washington and revealed her apprehensions. Washington accepted the invitation, but before he left for the entertainment he ordered a detachment of his Life Guard, dressed in English uniform, to watch the house and make their appearance early in the evening. As they approached, Ettrick, taking them for tory troops, said to his guest, "General, I believe you are my prisoner." Washington cast his eye over the Guard, and replied, "I believe not, sir; but you are mine." Ettrick, after having been kept a prisoner for a short time, was, at the intercession of his daughter, permitted to leave the country. He settled in Nova Scotia.

COL. THOMAS ELLISON'S HOUSE

Gen. Washington's Headquarters, New Windsor, June 23, 1779, to July 25, 1779, and from December 8, 1780, to June 25, 1781. The Capture of Stony Point and Battle of Yorktown were both Planned here.

The circumstances which led to the estrangement of Washington and Hamilton, resulting in the withdrawal of Hamilton from his position as aid-de-camp, occurred here in 1781. It is referred to simply to correct the impression which prevails that Hamilton was the chosen counselor of Washington; that he and not Washington was the author of the reply of the latter to the Newburgh Letters, and that he and not Washington was the author of many of the public papers of Washington, including his Farewell Address. The facts are that after the episode at the Ellison house, Washington had no intercourse with Hamilton, whatever, except such as became necessary in their official relations as members of the Constitutional Convention of 1786, and subsequently while Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury, during the first and part of the second terms of Washington's administration. The story, as related by Hamilton in a letter to Gen. Schuyler, under date of "Headquarters, New Windsor, February 18, 1781," is as follows: "Since I had the pleasure of writing you last, an unexpected change has taken place in my situation. I am no longer a member of the General's family. This information will surprise you, and the manner of the change will surprise you more. Two days ago, the General and I passed each other on the stairs. He told me he wanted to speak to me. I answered that I would wait upon him immediately. I went below and delivered Mr. Tilghman a letter to be sent to the Commissary, containing an order of a pressing and interesting nature. Returning to the General, I was stopped on the way by the Marquis de LaFayette, and we conversed together about a minute on a matter of business. He can testify how impatient I was to get back, and that I left him in a manner which, but for our intimacy would have been more than abrupt. Instead of finding the General, as is usual, in his room I met him at the head of the stairs, where, accosting me in an angry tone, "Colonel Hamilton," said he, "you have kept me waiting at the head of the stairs these ten minutes. I must tell you, sir, you treat me with disrespect." I replied without petulency, but with decision, "I am not conscious of it, sir; but since you have thought it necessary to tell me so, we part." Very well, sir," said he, "if it be your choice," or something to that effect, and we separated. In less than an hour afterwards, Tilghman* came to me in the General's name, assuring me of his desire, in a candid conversation, to heal a difference which could not have happened except in a moment of passion." This interview Hamilton declined, and excused the step which he had taken from his dislike for the office of an aid-de-camp "as having a kind of personal dependence."*

*————— Tilgham was Washington's favorite aide-de-camp, and the only officer of whom he ever spoke in eulogy.

*Words of Alexander Hamilton by J. C. Hamilton, Vol. I, 211.

In regard to the occupation of the house by Washington in 1779, the following note has been preserved among the papers of Col. Thomas Ellison:

Headquarters, Smith's Clove,
21st June, 1779—½ past 5 P. M.

"His Excellency, the Commander-in-Chief, thinks proper to accept your house as headquarters, from the description I gave him, on my return from thence last night. He, with his guards, set off immediately and his baggage will follow.

Your most obt. Humble Servt.,

C. GIBBS."

Gibb was then the captain commandant of Washington's Guard. Lossing fixes the date "June 23d," but the notes of Capt. Gibb, dated on the 21st, seems to determine the date as the afternoon of that day. During the winter of 1781, Mrs. Washington was with her husband.

Plum Point.—Plum Point, the site of the first European settlement in the present county of Orange,* lies a short distance below the Ellison house and forms the North bank of Murderer's Creek, at its confluence with the Hudson. It is a singular formation, having the appearance of artificial construction. The theory in regard to it is that in the convulsions attending the dissolution of the glacial period, it was pushed out from its original bed by the pressure of water and ice. It has an area of about eighty acres, approached over a natural causeway. On the southeast side was located, in the early part of the war, a battery of fourteen guns, designed to assist in maintaining the obstructions to the navigation of the river which, at this point, consisted of a chevaux-de-frise stretching across to Pollopel's Island, which is seen through the opening in the trees. The battery was maintained during the war, for the purpose originally designed and for the protection of the works in the vicinity. It was known in official orders as "Captain Machin's Battery at New Windsor." Outlines of its embrasures may yet be seen, and can be approached by permission from the Verplanck residence or by the old army road which runs around the face of the hill from the Nicol homestead.

LaFayette's Headquarters.—The Brewster or Williams house at Moodna, which is credited with occupancy by LaFayette, is just beyond the paper mills on the south side of the Forge Hill road. Of its occupancy by LaFayette there is only traditionary evidence, at best it was so occupied during the winter of 1780-'81, while Washington had his headquarters at the Ellison house. It will be remembered that LaFayette was absent in France while Washington was at Newburgh. The house has been in Battery of fourteen guns, erected in 1778, for defense and to cover chevaux-de-frise in channel of Hudson River, from Murderer's Creek to Pollopel's Island. Plum Point was the site of the first European settlement in Orange County.

BREWSTER HOUSE—LAFAYETTE'S HEADQUARTERS

Erected by Samuel Brewster, 1755. Opposite this house was Brewster's Forge, where the chain to obstruct the Hudson River was made. The cellar of this house was the depository of the money from the Dutch Loan, to pay the Continental Army.

the occupation of tenants for several years and is decaying. The vault in the cellar is said to have been the temporary place of deposit of the money known as the "Dutch loan," but on what authority does not appear. Mr. Brewster is referred to on another page. A house on the Forge Hill road, erected by Samuel Brewster in 1763, was probably built for Mr. Brewster's son, Timothy Brewster, who removed after the war to Woodbridge, N. J.

Edmonston House.—The Edmonston house at Vail's Gate is said to have been occupied by Generals Gates and St. Clair, of which there is no evidence, and also, in part at least, by the medical staff. That it was connected with the army in some way is more than probable; the headquarters of the medical staff, however, were in the James Clinton house in the village of New Windsor, as appears by letters of Mrs. Clinton. The hospital of the army was in the vicinity. Dr. Thacher writes, under date of April 30, 1781: "I accompanied Dr. John Hart to New Windsor to pay our respects to Dr. John Cochrane, who is lately promoted to the office of Director-General of the hospitals of the United States, as successor to Dr. Shippen, resigned." On the 15th Dec., 1782, after the army returned here, he writes: "Dined with my friends, Drs. Townsend, Eastis and Adams, at the hospital, in company with Generals Gates and Howe and their aides, Dr. Cochrane, our Surgeon-General, and several other officers. Our entertainment was ample and elegant." The location of the hospital is shown on the map of the camp-ground, given elsewhere. The Edmonston house is of stone and is said to have been erected in 1755. It stands a short distance west of the point where the "Short-Cut" intersects the Newburgh Branch of the Erie railroad.

Fall's House or "Woods"—The Fall's house, Little Britain Square, or "Woods" as marked on the DeWitt map, was occupied by Gov. Geo. Clinton, as commander-in-chief of the military forces of the State, for a short time in October, 1777. Clinton and his brother, Gen. James Clinton were in command at the forts in the Highlands at the time of their reduction, October 7, 1777. The former was then a resident of the house subsequently of Capt. Charles Ludlow a short distance north of New Windsor village. On the fall of the forts his family made hasty retreat to the interior, and found temporary refuge at the residence of Mrs. Falls.* The troops who escaped from the forts as well as the militia of the district that had not been engaged, were rendezvoused in the vicinity and re-organized prior to their march for the defence of Kingston. While waiting for his men to come in, on the 10th of October, at noon, a horseman came near the camp, where, being challenged by a sentinel, he replied, "I am a friend and wish to see General Clinton." On being conducted to the Governor's headquarters he discovered that he had made a mistake. He had been sent by Sir Henry Clinton, of the British forces with a message to General Burgoyne, and after passing the Highlands had encountered troops in British uniform. Presuming that Sir Henry's forces had moved forward, he drew near the camp only to learn that he was within the lines of the Colonists, some of whom were clothed in British uniform which had been captured from a transport some time previously and had not been redyed. When he discovered his mistake he was observed to swallow something. To recover whatever it might be, Dr. Moses Higby, who was at the camp, administered a powerful emetic. This brought from him a small silver ball of an oval form shut with a screw in the middle. "Though closely watched," writes Clinton, "he had the art to conceal it a second time. I made him believe I had taken one Capt. Campbell,* another messenger who was out on the same business, that I learned from him all I wanted to know, and demanded the ball on pain of being hung up instantly and cut open to search for it. This brought it forth." The ball was found to contain the following:

Fort Montgomery, Oct. 8, 1777

"Nous y voice, (we come), and nothing between us but Gates. I sincerely hope this little success of ours may facilitate your operations. In answer to your letter of the 25th Sept., by C. C., I shall only say, I cannot presume to order, or even advise, for reasons obvious. I heartily wish you success. "Gen. Burgoyne. Faithfully yours, H. Clinton."

Taylor was placed in custody, and on the 14th a general court martial met for his trial, the proceedings of which are recorded as follows:

"At a general court martial, held at the heights of New Windsor, the 14th October, 1777, by order of Brigadier-General George Clinton, whereof Colonel Lewis DuBois was present.

Captain Gillespie,	Captain Conklin,
Captain Ellis,	Captain Wood,
Captain Wyllis,	Captain Hamstrack,
Captain Watson,	Captain Lee,
Captain Savage,	Captain Husted,
Major Huntington,	Major Bradford,

Daniel Taylor, charged with lurking about the camp as a spy from the enemy, confined by order of General Clinton, was brought before said court, and to the above crime the prisoner plead not guilty. But confessed his being an Express from General (Sir Henry) Clinton to Burgoyne when taken and that he had been employed as an Express also from General Burgoyne to General Clinton, and was taken in the camp of the army of the United States, near New Windsor, by Lieut. Howe. Taylor likewise confessed his being a first Lieutenant in Captain Stewart's Company in the Ninth Regiment of the British troops, and but one man in company when taken. The prisoner pleaded that he was not employed as a spy, but on the contrary was charged both by General Clinton and Burgoyne not to come near our camp; but meeting accidentally with some of our troops in British uniform, he was thereby deceived and discovered himself to them.

*Capt. Campbell succeeded in passing the American lines, and reached Burgoyne with a similar message on the 16th October.

The court, after considering the case, were of opinion that the prisoner is guilty of the charge brought against him, and adjudged to suffer death, to be hanged at such time and place as the General shall direct.

LEWIS DuBOIS, President.

Gov. Clinton's little army had in the meantime been re-inforced by a detachment from Gen. Putnam and taken up its march toward Kingston. It was not until Marbletown was reached that Clinton had time to review the decision of the court martial. On the 16th he approved the sentence and ordered it to be carried into execution "when the troops are paraded and before they march to-morrow morning." The execution, however, did not take place until the 18th. Taylor's ultimate fate as well as an account of Clinton's march to Kingston are set forth in the following diary:

This diary is said to have been written by Nathaniel Webb, an officer in the Second New York Regiment, and that the original is or was in possession of Dr. Ezekiel Webb of Elmira.

"Oct. 6, 1777.—Monday—The shipping came opposite Dunderbarrack. About 2 o'clock p. m. ye enemy began ye attack on Fort Montgomery and Clinton, and between daylight and dark ya carried ye garrison by storm.

"Colonel Meigs, with reinforcements arrived at ye ferry, two miles above ye fort, just as ye enemy prevailed. Immediately upon ye misfortune, our people burnt ye ships Montgomery and Congress, and ye Shark, a row galley—and blew up Fort Constitution. Govr and B. Genl. James Clinton, Col Lamb, Col. DuBois, Mr. Gano, Dr. Cook, and a principal part of officers and men made yar escape under cover of ye night. There were not more than 600 men to defend ye two forts against near 3,000.

7. Tuesday—Army marched towards Fishkill.

8. Wednesday—Arrived at Fishkill about noon and the Detachment with Col. Webb's Regt. marched to ye River, and crost at New Windsor.

11. Saturday—Proceeded to Little Britain Headquarters. Troops encamped Major Bradford arrived in camp, to ye no small joy of ye Detachment.

15. Wednesday—The shipping past by ye chicvaux-de-frize early ys morning—the troops ordered to march. Col. DuBois, ye train of artillery and militia advanced. Col. Webb and Major Bradford brought up ye rear, and marcht to Shongom and put up.

16. Thursday—Troops marcht early ys morning. The Gov'r sent us word yt ye enemy were within 7 miles of Kingston last night, 12 o'e., and ordered us on with all speed. We forced our march to Rosendol's creek, within 8 miles of ye town of Kingston, alias Esopus when we discovered ye smoke of ye buildings on fire by ye enemy. Finding we were too late to save ye town, we soon wheeled off to ye left, and reacht Marble Town. We have marcht about thirty miles this day, having packs carried in wagons most of ye way. The people had got most of their goods removed but several families suffered exceedingly by the fire. There was little or no resistance made to ye enemy's landing. Ya immediately, upon firing ye town, run back to ye water in great fright. They fired many platoons, but had not ye luck to kill anybody, except a Tory prisoner, who happened in their way as we are informed.

A notable instance this of ye English Honour, Courage and Magnanimity—to attack a defenseless town and a few women and children, with a body of 700 men with all solemn pomp of war. Surely such troops might be a terror to ye world, for if no power should oppose them, they may yet burn half ye towns and cities of ye earth. Yes, most gallant Gen'l Vaun, your name will be handed down to posterity, and published to ye world, with many singular marks of honour.

17. Friday—Army marcht to Hurley, a precinct in Kingston, and encamped. The enemy advanced up ye River, burning wherever they dare land yar troops. Ys evening we have certain intelligence yt Gen. Burgoyne and his army of 5,000 men have just submitted prisoners upon articles of capitulation—an event most happy, and demands the highest thanks of all Americans to ye God of armies.

18. Saturday—Mr. Taylor, a spy, lately taken in Little Britain, was hung here. The Rev. Mr. Romain and myself attended him yesterday, and I have spent the morning in discoursing to him, and attended him at ye gallows. He did not appear to be either a political or a gospel penitent.*

Lossing, in his Field-Book, states—not without authority it is presumed—that Major Armstrong, the author of the "Newburgh Letters," had his quarters at the Falls house, and that there those in the secret held their private conferences. At that time the house was occupied as a tavern by one Woods, (qr.' Cornelius Wood), and was used to its capacity by army officers. A fact established of record is that Col. Barber, Deputy Inspector-General under Baron Steuben, had his quarters here at the time of the accident by which he lost his life in visiting the cantonment of the army. The property was the homestead of Samuel B. Moores in later years. It has suffered little modification or change. One room is pointed out as having been occupied by Washington on several occasions and a curious closet therein as having been finished in its present form by a mechanical officer of the army.

The Clinton Homestead.—The homestead erected by Col. Charles Clinton the birthplace of Gen. James Clinton and of Gen. and Gov. Geo. Clinton, and possibly of Gov. DeWitt Clinton, was in occupancy by Gen. James Clinton, his mother and family during the war and at all times the seat of movements connected with the army and with the politics and history of the State. The buildings—there were five of them in connection—were removed, with the exception of one of them, some years ago. Substantially nothing but the historic associations of the place remain. The story of its occupants is told elsewhere in these pages. The original of the five buildings was erected in 1730, of stone and rough boards, consisted only of one large room fifteen or twenty feet square, with two small windows and a door in front and a door and a small window in the rear. A large fire-place occupied the north end of the room, and an open chamber covered the whole to the roof. To this was added later a building on the right with one door and three windows, and to this was again added, on the extreme right, a kitchen with a door and one window. Then followed, in 1763, an addition to the original building on the left, of two stories, and lastly an addition on the extreme left which was far more pretentious than any of its predecessors. It was erected in 1791, but by whom is uncertain. It had a piazza on three sides, and was of good finish. The older parts would scarcely be regarded as habitable at the present time, their ceilings were low and their appointments exceedingly limited. Gen. James Clinton, the last Clinton, owner and occupant, erected a more modern structure on the Little Britain road, and occupied it at the time of his death. The Clinton burial ground was on an elevation nearly opposite the house. In it were also interred the remains of many relatives and friends. The plot was enclosed in later years by Hon. James G. Clinton, with a substantial stone wall with coping and iron gates, but was subsequently suffered by neglect. This condition led Mr. John A. Gray, of New York, grandson of the second wife of Gen. Clinton, to remove the remains of the Clintons and their principal connections to Woodlawn Cemetery, where their resting place is now marked by a substantial monument.

*From letters found in Taylor's possession it was inferred that he was a resident of Kinderhook and had enlisted in the services of the King. His execution as a spy was handily justified by the facts connected with his arrest.

CLINTON HOUSE

Hamilton's Tavern.—The district known as "The Square" was famous in the history of the town for years anterior to the revolution; it is more particularly referred to in another connection. Conspicuous in its revolutionary history was the hostelry of Mrs. Sarah Hamilton, which stood on the southeast corner of the roads which here cross each other. No special assignment of officers to it is of record, but the general fact, attested by tradition, is that it was so occupied, and moreover that it was the scene of more army life of a given character than any of the numerous hostelries of the town. The building was destroyed by fire some years ago. On the opposite, southwest, corner is a building which is one of the somewhat numerous number said to have been occupied by LaFayette.

Mr. John Ellison House or "Knox's Headquarters."—A short distance northwest of Moodna, via the old Forge Hill road, and on the old Blooming Grove and New Windsor turnpike, stands the house and estate for many years in the occupancy of John Ellison and his descendants, but erected by his father Col. Thomas Ellison, the main building in 1754, as appears by contract with Wm. Bull, the builder, and the eastern part at an earlier date, probably in 1734. The main building is of stone, with high ceilings, wainscoting, dormer windows, heavy sash and small panes of glass; the eastern section of wood, with low ceilings and large fireplace. The rooms in the main building are exceedingly substantial and antique; in the older part a bedroom opening from the kitchen has a trap-door and vault which was no doubt the "strong-box" of the proprietor. The house formerly fronted the old road leading from the village of New Windsor to Goshen, which then ran in front of the house. The turnpike changed the line of this road and runs in the rear of the house leaving the old front unexposed except on visitation. South of the house at the edge of a remarkable ravine the proprietor had a grist-mill of wide repute but now removed, but the dashing waters of Silver Stream through the ravine to the Moodna and the "twin lakes" of the old mill-pond remain.

The building is locally known as "Knox's Headquarters," it having been occupied by Gen. Knox at different times in 1779, '80, '81, '82. Gen. Greene, and Cols. Wadsworth and Biddle were also quartered here, and ultimately ('82, '83) it was the headquarters of Major-General Gates, then in command of the cantonment.*

Aside from these general facts, the house has a history of interest in connection with the social life of the officers of the army who were stationed within its walls and in its vicinity. They were mainly young men, and many of them with bright wives who found here the conveniences for the entertainments which they prized. Tradition affirms that on one occasion the brilliant Mrs. Knox gave an entertainment here at which Washington was present and opened the dance with Maria Colden, who is said to have been a daughter of Cadwallader Colden, jr., of Coldenham, that among the guests were Gitty Wynkoop and Sally Jansen of Kingston, who were great belles in their day, and that a French officer, who was present, gallantly inscribed with his diamond ring the names of the trio on one of the small window panes in the sash of the principal room. The glass with the graven names remained in the sash to attest the truth of the story for over one hundred years and until removed to insure its continued preservation during a period when the property was not occupied.

The question whether Washington danced will never perhaps be settled to the satisfaction of every one. Gen. Greene, in 1779, writes to a friend in regard to a ball which he attended the night before: "His Excellency and Mrs. Greene danced three hours without once sitting down." Mrs. Alex. Hamilton, on the contrary, informed Historian Lossing that Washington never danced; that he often attended balls and parties on invitation, and sometimes walked the figures, but that she never saw him

*Certificate of the occupation by Genl. Knox and Cols. Wadsworth and Biddle is preserved in Washington's Headquarters. Occupation by Genl. Gates rests on the statement of Chastellux, written in December, 1782: "After viewing the barracks, I regained the high road; but passing before Genl. Gate's house, the same that Genl. Knox occupied in 1780, I stopped sometime to make a visit of politeness."

attempt to dance. The late Mr. Robert R. Ellison stated in reference to the party at Mrs. Knox's: "Maria Colden and Sallie Jansen were relatives of John Ellison, the former through his sister's marriage with Cadwallader Colden, Jr., and the latter through his wife, Catharine Jansen, of Kingston. On the occasion of the ball at Knox's Headquarters, Washington did not open the dance with Maria Colden, but, the doors being thrown open, promenaded with her through the rooms. This has been the tradition in our family, members of which were present, and has been confirmed by others who were witnesses." The traditions in the old army families of New Windsor and Newburgh, however, strongly confirm the testimony of Gen. Greene. That Washington danced in his more active years may be accepted as a fact and not the least of the memories of this ancient mansion is the picture of his army life which the ball at Mrs. Knox's affords.

The Camp Ground and Temple.—It would be as difficult to fix the periods at which some part of New Windsor was not occupied by either militia or regular troops during the revolution, as to specify the times when it was so occupied or by what particular bodies of men. Aside from the rendezvous of its several militia companies, it is certain that at least a portion of the regiment of Col. James Clinton, in the Canada campaign of 1775, was recruited at Little Britain; that in 1776 the battery at Plum Point was mounted; in 1777, Gov. George Clinton re-organized, at the Falls House, the militia and fugitives from the Highland Forts; in 1779-80 nine brigades of the Continental army were encamped here, and other brigades and regiments in 1780, '81, '82 and '83. The precise grounds on which these encampments were located, with the exception of those of 1782, '83, are equally buried in oblivion. In regard to the last, however, the record is dear. With the exception of Lamb's artillery, which came here in July, 1782, and subsequently removed to West Point, the right and left wings of the army, with the exception of the Connecticut regiments, were cantoned on both sides of Silver Stream, in the vicinity of the John Ellison house, which became the headquarters of Gen. Gates in command, in October, 1782, and remained there until June 20, 1783, a period of about seven months. The "main army," as it was designated, had been concentrated at Verplanck's Point in September, '82, to bid adieu to its French allies, enroute to Boston for return to France, and that service having been performed, the left wing, under Major-General Heath, and the right wing under Major-General Gates, broke camp on the 23rd of October, crossed the Hudson at West Point on the 27th, and reached the camp ground on the 28th. The right wing followed a few days later. Huts and barracks were erected, and also a building known as The Temple for general army purposes and public worship. "In this cantonment," writes Heath, "the army spent the winter very comfortably, and it proved to be their last winter quarters."

The points of special interest in connection with the cantonment are:

1. The precise organizations which were embraced in the cantonment;
2. Their location;
3. The character of the barracks which they occupied;
4. The public building or The Temple; and
5. The disbandment of the army.

1. The troops designated in official orders which were cantoned here were: Maryland detachment, New Jersey regiment and New Jersey battalion, 1st and 2d New York regiments; New Hampshire regiment and New Hampshire battalion, and the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 7th and 8th Massachusetts regiments, the whole representing a force of six to eight thousand men. The cantonment was under command of Major-General Gates during the winter of '82-3, with headquarters at the John Ellison house in its immediate vicinity.

2. The location of several lines is shown on the accompanying official map of the cantonment, except in the case of the Maryland detachment. Reference to the map will show that the "2d M. Brig." was barracked on the south part of the Heron farm east of the Forge Hill road beside a small stream of water, and the "1st and 3d M. Brigs." on the McGill farm west of that road. The New York, New Jersey and New Hampshire lines were west of the swamp, on "Rice Meadows," through the center of which flow the waters of Silver Stream, erroneously marked "Beaver Dam." The two divisions of the camp were united by a causeway across the stream and swamps. The line of the barracks can still be traced on the west side of the swamp, but those on the east have disappeared, as has also the causeway. The hospital was on the Major Morton place, now (1892), of Judge Fancher. It was no doubt erected in the early part of the war. Surveys from the "Brewster" house, which remains, would no doubt locate every line almost precisely.

3. The character of the barracks and the appearance of the cantonment are equally of specific record, Marquis de Chastellux, who visited Washington in Newburgh, Dec. 5th, '82, writes: "On the 7th, I took leave of General Washington. Col. Tighlman accompanied me on horseback to show me the road, and barracks that serve as winter quarters for the American army, which were not quite finished, though the season was far advanced and the cold very severe. They are spacious, healthy and well built, and consist in a row of log houses containing two chambers, each inhabited by eight soldiers when complete, which makes five to six affectives; a second range of barracks is destined for the non-commissioned officers. These barracks are placed in the middle of the woods on the slope of the hill, and within reach of the water. As the great object is a healthy and convenient situation, the army are on several hills not exactly parallel with each other. But it will appear singular in Europe, that these barracks should be built without a bit of iron, not even nails, which would render the work tedious and difficult were not the Americans very expert in putting wood together. After viewing the barracks I regained the main road." While the description is sufficiently specific it will be remembered that the word huts is frequently employed in current histories; but huts, i. e. "little walls made of stones heaped up, the intervals filled in with earth kneaded with water, or simply with mud, a few planks for a roof, an outside chimney and a small door at the side of the chimney," although in frequent use were not constructed here. This is also the testimony of Gen. Heath, who describes the cantonment as "regular and beautiful," and is further confirmed by the drawings made by William Tarball, a soldier of the Seventh Massachusetts regiment recently recovered and fully attested. The cantonment was literally a city of log houses in the woods, the counterpart of which has never existed in the history of armies or of nations.

4. The public building, or The Temple of Virtue as it was familiarly known in the army, was located on what is now designated Temple Hill, on the farm of William L. McGill, and its site marked by a shaft or pyramid of field stones laid up for that purpose—a crude monument perhaps but one in keeping with the circumstances which it commemorates. Though not shown on the map of the cantonment, not being contemporaneous with it in date, the location is thoroughly established by tradition unbroken since 1783, and inferentially by the location of the lines of the encampment. Gen. Heath writes in regard to it: "Upon an eminence the troops erected a building handsomely finished with a spacious hall, sufficient to contain a brigade of troops on Lord's Day, for public worship, with an orchestra at one end; the vault of the ceiling was arched, at each end of the hall were two rooms conveniently situated for the issuing of general orders, for the sitting of Boards of Officers, Court Martials, etc., and an office and store for the Quartermaster and Commissary's departments. On the top was a cupola, and flag staff on which a flag was hoisted occasionally for a signal "l. c." How this description came to be overlooked by Mr. Lossing in preparing his Field Book and a misleading pictorial representative given of a building at West Point occupied for Masonic purposes, cannot be explained, but happily the error has been corrected not only by the quotation from Gen. Heath, but by the recovery of a drawing by William Tarbell, of whom notice has already been made, a fac simile copy of which is given herewith, which represents the building as a large and substantial structure, resting upon a stone foundation rising four or five feet above grade to the window sills. The windows were perhaps eight feet high and the whole height from the ground to the eaves from fifteen to twenty feet. The windows shown are nine in number (one side only represented), five of which are on the south and four on the north, with a doorway near the center, on either side of which are two Corinthian columns surmounted by a cupalo and flag-staff. The building above the foundation was clearly a framed structure with a steep shingled roof. The Corinthian columns and the tessellated pavement are unmistakable emblems of the Masonic Fraternity. Evidently they were not employed as ornaments merely, but as indicating the connection of that order as well as the army proper, with the structure and its uses. It may well be doubted whether there is in the nation a building more invested with important revolutionary events than this —no spot more hallowed by patriotic associations. The only celebration that Washington ever ordered was held here on the 14th April, 1783; here and here alone is it noted that the army, "with voices and instruments," rolled Billings' anthem, "No King but God!" bold and strong against the sky; here that the hopes of monarchial politicians were crushed by the reply of Washington to the "Newburgh Letters," and here that "The Society of the Cincinnati" was organized to perpetuate not only the friendships of officers and of nations, but to maintain forever a nation on the broad basis of freedom and independence.

5. In the construction of barracks and a public building it was evidently the expectation that the cantonment would have a longer continuance than it had. Peace, unseen in November, 1782, began to send out its harbingers during the winter, and in April came the announcement of the exchange of preliminary articles which awaited only the concurrence of France. The certainty that this concurrence would follow led to the passage of orders by Congress to issue furloughs to men who had enlisted for the war, under which whole regiments marched from the cantonment, never to be again called into service. The Maryland detachment went out on the 5th of June; the New Jersey line on the 6th, and on the same day, the New York regiments marched to Poughkeepsie and there surrendered their drums and battle-flags to Gov. Clinton; the New Hampshire line on the 7th and the Massachusetts troops on the 8th and 9th. In every direction the roads were filled with veterans returning to their homes with well-earned honors but in poverty.

October 28, 1782, to June 20, 1783, when the Revolutionary Army was in Winter Quarters at New Windsor, Simeon DeWitt, Chief Geographer to the Army, mapped the encampment and surrounding country.

On the 11th of June The Temple was riven by lightning while its bunders were departing, and on Monday, June 22d, under Washington's order, the "short term" men were marched to West Point and the sick taken down by boats. The barracks of the 1st and 3d Massachusetts brigades, together with The Temple, were sold by auction, under direction of the Quartermaster-General, on the 13th of September following, and their debray and walls suffered to decay or became obliterated by the year. Looking upon their ancient seats the entire panorama of the Revolution passes before the mental vision, and in the flash of the guns that lighted up the world the ancient town is blended as the center from which radiates all its scenes.

On the accompanying official map the location of the dwellings of several of the sturdy patriots of New Windsor are given, and from the fact that others are omitted it is inferred that those marked were at least in part occupied by army officers. Identification, however, cannot now be made further than that Joel Barlow, "chaplain, poet and politician," is said to have had quarters with Deacon Saml. Brewster in the house marked "Brewster's." Most of the buildings on the map are still standing (1892) and in occupation, and on the same old roads with the exception of the highway on which "Dusenberry's" is marked, which was abandoned on the construction of the "Snake Hill turnpike" a short distance further east. New roads and drives abound, but substantially the revolutionary roads remain.

CHAPTER VIII.

CHURCH HISTORY.

The religious history of New Windsor has representation in church organizations both within and without its borders, viz: The Church of England Mission, the Highlands or Bethlehem Church, the Wallkill or Goodwill Church, the Neelytown Church, the Associate Presbyterian Church of Little Britain, the Presbyterian Church at New Windsor, Berea Church, St. George's Episcopal Church at Newburgh, St. David's Church in Hamptonburgh, St. Thomas' Episcopal Church in New Windsor, the Methodist Episcopal Churches at Vail's Gate and Little Britain, and St. Patrick's Church at Newburgh through its recently established mission at New Windsor village. Confining attention to the churches within the town, we notice first

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSION.

In response to petitions which have been referred to in another part of this work,* the London "Society for the propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" established, in 1730, the New Windsor Mission or Parish, and appointed to its charge the Rev. Richard Charlton, who entered upon his duties in 1731. The parish then embraced a district of some twenty miles on the Hudson and a nearly equal distance west, including in New Windsor the families of Alsop, Ellison, Chambers, Mulliner and Matthews; the Coldens of Coldenham; Phineas McIntosh, of Newburgh; Henry Wileman of Wilemantown, and other residents. Mr. Charlton removed to New York and was succeeded by the Rev. W. Kilpatrick,*who continued the work until about 1734, from which

*See "Name," chapter I. Chartered by King William, June 16, 1701.

Hawkins, in his "Historical Notices of the Missions of the Church of England," states that the Rev. Mr. Charlton held "the humble but important office of catechist to the negroes, first at New Windsor, and afterwards at New York." While no doubt appointed to that office there could have been but few, if any negroes in New Windsor at that time. He remained in New Windsor but a short time, removing to New York in 1732, where he baptised a considerable number of the class to whom he was appointed. In 1747, he was promoted to the church of St. Andrew, on Staten Island, where he died in 1777.

*The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel supplied Mr. Charlton's place by removing their missionary. Rev. Mr. Kilpatrick, from Cape Fair, Newfoundland, to New Windsor, but he, having a large family and being a corpulent man, soon got tired of the country as well as they of him."—St. Andrew's Church Records.

time until 1744-5, when the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins was appointed the parish was vacant. Mr. Watkins, soon after his appointment, divided the parish into three stations, one at New Windsor, one on the Otterkill where he resided, and one on the Walkkill, the New Windsor station was changed to Newburgh, in 1747, where, soon after, the Glebe which had been set apart for the support of a Lutheran minister, passed into its possession, and became known as the Parish of Newburgh, and in 1770, by letters of incorporation, as St. George's. The station on the Otterkill, in the same year (1770) was given the title of St. David's, and the one on the Walkkill that of St. Andrew's. Letters of incorporation for the several stations were obtained by the Rev. John Sayre* who succeeded Mr. Watkins in 1769-'70. Mr. Sayre resigned in 1775, and from that time until 1790 none of the churches had a rector. The Rev. George H. Spierin was then engaged and served until 1793, from which time until 1806, the rectorship of St. George's and St. David's were vacant, although for the purpose of bringing legal action for the recovery of the Glebe in 1805, the Rev. Cave Jones was appointed agent for the St. George's and took up his residence in Newburgh. The Rev. Frederick Van Horne, who had been in charge of St. Andrew's from 1793, agreed to serve the three congregations in 1806. He was succeeded in 1809, by the Rev. Mr. Mackin, and in 1810 by the Rev. Wm.

Dr. Johnson, of Connecticut, recommended Mr. Hezekiah Watkins as a proper person to be sent home for Orders. A small subscription was raised for him and he went to England, was ordained and appointed by the Society as missionary with a salary of only £30 (then about $30) to officiate at three divisions of the mission—New Windsor, Otterkill and Walkkill. Mr. Watkins was a single man of an easy and inoffensive disposition, so that he lived happily with his people till the day of his death.—St. Andrew's Records.

The Watkins family settled near the Otterkill, and established their family burying ground. In this burying ground, now entirely neglected, and from which it is said many head-stones have been removed and converted into door-stones, lie the remains of the reverend missionary and also of those of his mother, Joanna, widow of Ephriam Watkins and of several members of his father's family—Abel, Joseph, Joseph 2nd, Hezekiah, Jesse and Subrint, wife of Samuel. The inscription on the head-stones of Rev. Hezekiah is as follows: "Sacred to the memory of the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, who departed this life on the 10th day of April, 1765, aged 57."

*The Rev. John Sayre removed from the Newburgh mission to Fairfield, Conn. In common with the great majority of the clergy of the Church of England, and especially those under appointment and pay of the London Society, he maintained allegiance to "his Majesty's person and government," and for so doing was confined to his house and garden and proclaimed as an enemy to his country, by the Revolutionists of Fairfield. A more severe blow than this, however, fell upon him at the hands of his friends. On the 7th of July, 1779, the notorious Governor Tryon, of New York, with a company of "loyal Americans," landed at Fairfield and set the town on fire, which, in its progress consumed the mission church and also Mr. Sayre's house, furniture, food and raiment. He then returned to New York or "within the King's lines."—Hawkins' Mission of the Church of England.

History of Newburgh, page 291.

Powell. The Rev. John Brown succeeded the latter as rector of St. George's and New Windsor in 1815, during which year "the Holy Communion was administered for the first time in the parish of Newburgh since the Revolutionary war, to the small number of three," so completely shattered had the church become through the participation of many of its members in the cause of the King. Through all its history the Ellisons of New Windsor were liberal supporters of the Mission, and to the liberality of one of the family, Thomas Ellison, Jr., of New York, was very largely due the re-establishment of St. George's, and the organization of the present St. Thomas' of New Windsor. The history of St. George's has been fully written as well as that of St. Andrew's. St. David's erected and enclosed a church edifice in 1771, but never completed it. It is said to have been occupied as a hospital during the encampment of the Army of the Revolution in the vicinity; that it was subsequently occupied for religious worship occasionally but was ultimately blown over and permitted to decay. The parish organization, however, was never entirely broken up, and possession of the site is still retained.

But St. David's may not be dismissed from the historic record at this point. The Rev. John Sayre, who succeeded Mr. Watkins, made an effort soon after his settlement to place the mission stations, which his predecessor had established, on a more substantial basis, and to this end secured for them, as already stated, letters of incorporation under the titles by which they have since been known. In addition to this he endeavored to secure the erection of a church edifice at New Windsor village and to establish there what he called the "capital" of the parish. Col. Thomas Ellison and the New Windsor members readily embraced his views, and they were also favorably entertained by the principal parishoners of Newburgh. Indeed, the proposition would in all probability, have been successfully accomplished had not the Rev. missionary gone one step further and added to his proposal that the charter to the Newburgh Glebe should be amended so as to restore the title of the "Parish of New Windsor" and secure to the "capital" the income of the Glebe. He urged that New Windsor was entitled to this by reason of original dedication and from the fact that it had not only "had all the burden of the two first missionaries," but that the district was still known as the "Parish of New Windsor" by the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts," to the records of which the title should conform. The trustees of the parish of Newburgh refused to agree to this amendment, saying that they would not have given their assent to the building of the church "near New Windsor" had they had "the most distant thought" that it would "have tended to affix the Glebe at Newburgh to a church at New Windsor," and "urged their fear of the people of Newburgh if they should consent to such a step, and that it would be unsafe for them to ride the roads for fear of assassination" should they do so. The matter of changing the charter of the Glebe was, therefore, dropped, but a subscription for building a church edifice was raised and from the tenor of its conditions it may be inferred that there was no little feeling upon the subject. By these conditions the amounts subscribed were made payable to the "Rector and members of St. David's Church, in the precinct of Cornwall," on the condition that the building should be erected "on a spot of ground to be agreed upon and procured" on the south side of Chambers' creek, "so that the same" should "be out of and independent of the jurisdiction of the trustees of the Parish of Newburgh." Whether this building was erected or not, or whether it was the building known as St. David's Church, which is said to have been erected in 1771, as above noticed, does not appear. From the dates alone and the conditions of the subscription it is inferred that the St. David's edifice was erected by this subscription. The following were the subscribers:

The subsequent history of St. David's is comparatively a blank. It is possible that it is referred to in the minutes of St. George's under date of August 4, 1806, in which it is said that the "Church at Goshen, St. Andrews, New Windsor, and Newburgh, had agreed to unite in supporting a clergyman," but of this there is no certainty. As already stated, however, the organization of the parish was maintained and at least occasional services held until a comparatively recent period. Its last election for Wardens was in 1857, and the persons then elected have since exercised authority over the real estate of the parish in the absence of successors.

Running through such records as have been preserved are traces of a church at New Windsor. In the records of St. Andrews it is written that the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins officiated "at three divisions of the mission, viz: At New Windsor on the Hudson river, at the Otterkill, and at the Wallkill; that during this time no place of worship was erected except at the Wallkill division;" that after the change in the charter of the Glebe in 1750, Mr. Watkins officiated in Newburgh "every third Sunday in a small church on the Glebe built by the Lutherans;" that "the church was before that kept at the town of New Windsor, and his moving to Newburgh gave offence to the heads of the church at New Windsor and caused an unhappy rupture that was detrimental to the church thereafter;" that Mr. Sayre "preached alternately at Newburgh, the Otterkill division, and Wallkill division," and "obtained a charter for each church, viz: St. George's, St. Andrew's, and St. David's, all dated July 30, 1770." The effort of Mr. Sayre to change the charter of the Glebe and its result have already been stated, and is in harmony with the St. Andrew's record, but further reference to a church at New Windsor does not appear until 1806, when it is of record that the "Church at Goshen, St. Andrews, New Windsor, and Newburgh had agreed to unite in supporting a clergyman," and at a later date it is written that the Rev. Dr. Brown "revived the church at New Windsor" in 1818. The question involved is perhaps sufficiently explained by the language of the references quoted, from which it will be gathered that the first mission station was at New Windsor, that it was removed from thence to Newburgh; that effort was made to restore it to New Windsor; that there was at New Windsor some kind of an organization which found shelter under the charter of St. David's; that this organization is that referred to in 1806, and that the revived church under Dr. Brown was the formal organization of an informal society which had existed from the institution of the "Parish of New Windsor" in 1731.

From this field of research we turn to the record of the establishment of which was largely due to a bequest made by Thomas Ellison, Jr., of New York, by his will in 1793. This bequest was in the following terms:

“I give and bequeath unto my brother, William Ellison, and my nephew, Thomas Ellison, and the survivors of them and the heirs of such survivors, all the lands I bought of Cornelius Tibout in New Windsor, Ulster Co. in the State of New York, containing in the several lots about fifty-five acres, in trust for a Glebe for such minister of the Gospel in communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York as shall hereafter be settled and have the care of souls in the said town of New Windsor, and his successor for the time being, forever. And also I give unto my said brother, William Ellison, and my nephew, Thomas Ellison, the sum of six hundred pounds, N. Y. currency, in such of my bonds as he and my nephew shall choose to be kept out at interest, and the annual interest arising therefrom to be paid to such minister for the time being toward his support and maintenance, and if there should be no such minister at the time of my death, then my will is that the rents and profits of the said lands and the interest of the said sum of six hundred pounds, shall yearly be put out at interest by my said brother, William Ellison, and my nephew Thomas Ellison, their heirs and executors (but not to be at his or their risk) and shall become principal and be added to the said sum of six hundred pounds yearly, until such minister shall be settled and have the care of souls in the said town of New Windsor, who shall officiate as a minister for one half of his time at least, and then the interest of the whole sum, so accumulated shall be yearly paid to such minister and his successors for the time being towards his and their support and maintenance. And whenever the inhabitants, for the time being of the said town of New Windsor, in communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the State of New York, shall become a religious corporation, then the said lands and the securities for the said moneys shall be conveyed and delivered to such corporation for the uses and purposes aforesaid.”

Under the encouragement of this bequest, Dr. Brown entered upon his parish labors in 1815, and took up his residence in New Windsor, subsequently removing to Newburgh. The New Windsor Church was then revived by him, and was formally organized under his charge on the eighth of April, 1818, at which time the name of St. Thomas was adopted and the following officers elected, viz: Wardens—Thomas Ellison, Charles Ludlow; Vestry—David Humphrey, Lewis DuBois, James Green, Gilbert Ogden Fowler, Joseph Morrell, Jonathan Bailey, Nathan H. Sayre, Jr., James Scott. Dr. Brown gave one-half of his time to the charge until 1844, when he resigned. A small building was fitted up by William Ellison in 1815, and was occupied until its destruction by fire in January, 1844. The erection of the present church edifice was commenced in 1847, and completed in 1849. A rectory was erected in 1859 and sold in 1864. It has more recently been owned and occupied by Mr. Robert H. Boyd. The church edifice is a neat Gothic building of stone, and is situated on the table-lands a short distance south of the village of New Windsor. The following have been the rectors of the parish:

1818-'44—Rev. John Brown. 1851-'56—Rev. Reuben Riley (Rev. Beverly Robinson Betts, assistant. 1857-'62—Rev. Christopher D. Wyatt (who officiated also as rector of St. John's, Canterbury). 1862-'66—Rev. R. H. Cressy. 1864-'67—Rev. Richard Temple (Rev. John Morgan officiated). 1872—Rev. Haslett McKim.

THE WALLKILL OR GOODWILL CHURCH.

Although taking its name from the district in which it was situated and in which its leading founders resided, the Wallkill or Goodwill Presbyterian Church included in its membership and congregation a considerable number of families residing in the western part of New Windsor. The precise date of its organization cannot be fixed, the earliest record evidence in relation to it being under date of September 20, 1729, at which time John McNeal presented an application to the Synod of Philadelphia for supplies of preaching.* The traditional evidence is that it was originally composed of "about forty families that had emigrated from the different parts of Ireland, but principally from the county of Londonderry," and who, in their new home, were called "the people of Wallkill." At that time it was emphatically a neighborhood church, and embraced the scattered settlers of the southeast portion of

*In the minutes of the Synod of Philadelphia, under date of Sept. 20, 1729, is the following entry: "Application from the people of Wallkill being presented to the Synod by their commissioner, John McNeal, representing their request of supplies of preaching among them, they are recommended to the care of the Presbytery of Philadelphia." This entry is not conclusive that the society was organized at that time; on the contrary, it conveys the impression that the "people of Wallkill" requested "supplies of preaching among them" with a view to establish a society. From the records of the commissioners of highways of Shawangunk, Sept. 1st, 1735, it appears that a society had been formed prior to that date, and was then engaged in erecting a "meeting house near the settlement of Adam Graham." The building gave place to a new one in 1763.—Rev. Jas. M. Jackson's Hist. Dis. "Goodwill" was the first or corporate name of the society.—"Wallkill" having been a local designation distinguishing it from the "Bethlehem" society, which was also known by the name of "Highlands" from the precinct in which it was located.

the old precinct of Shawangunk and of the northwestern part of the precinct of the Highlands. In the changing lives of civil organizations it was in the precincts of Shawangunk, Wallkill and Hanover, and ultimately in the town of Montgomery. No less than five churches have sprung from its loins—the Neelytown (now Hamptonburgh) Church, Hopewell Church, Graham's Church, Berea Church, and Montgomery Village Church, and several other societies have been recruited from its rank. It was served by occasional supplies until 1740, when it received its first settled pastor, Rev. Joseph Houston, who died a few months after entering upon his duties. His successor was the Rev. John Moffat, who was dismissed from the charge about 1765. Rev. John Blair succeeded Mr. Moffat and served from 1768 to 1771. His successor was the Rev. Andrew King, in 1776, who served until 1815. The first edifice occupied by the church was erected sometime prior to 1735. A very complete history of the church by the present pastor, Rev. J. M. Dickson, recently published, renders further notice unnecessary.

BETHLEHEM OR HIGHLANDS CHURCH.

Although now situated in the northwest part of the town of Cornwall, the Bethlehem Church was, like Goodwill, the center of a district, and originally, as it still is very largely, more strictly a New Windsor than a Cornwall Church. The date of its organization is uncertain, tradition affirming that it was as early as 1726, and that its first house of worship was erected in 1731. The following entry appears in its records of 1827:

"In the year 1739, the church lot of two acres of land was conveyed by John Nicoll, physician, in the city of New York, to James Stringham, Thomas Smith, Jr., Nathaniel DuBois, Joseph Sutherland and Samuel Luckie, in trust, and in the same year, by the aforesaid trustees, to Thomas Smith, Sr., Charles Clinton, and John Given, then Elders of the Presbyterian Church, of Bethlehem, and their successors. From the description in the deed, it appears that the church had been built previous to the date of the conveyance. According to the best information it must have been erected about the year 1731.

"The parsonage lot, containing one hundred and five acres—the two acre lot excepted—was conveyed in 1751, by the Rev. Alex Cumming, of the city of New York, and Margaret Nicoll his wife, who was the daughter and one of the heirs of the before mentioned John Nicoll, to Hezekiah Howell, Thomas Smith, Henry Case, John Crawford, and James Humphrey for the sum of fifty-one pounds, ten shillings, current money of the province of New York."

The date of organization depends somewhat perhaps upon the date of settlement of some of the parties named in the deed of 1739. Joseph Sutherland was probably one of the descendants of William Sutherland who came into the district as early as 1709, and whose son, David, was the owner of a portion of the patent, on which the church stands, prior to 1734. John Nicoll purchased the remainder of the patent in 1734. Thos.

Smith, Sr., petitioned for lands Sept. 3, 1731, and obtained patent in 1732. Charles Clinton settled in 1730. While these dates indicate that the society was formally organized not long anterior to the deed from Nicoll. (1739), the fact must be borne in mind that there were Presbyterians in the vicinity of the immigration under MacGregorie as early as 1685, who may have had at least an informal society as early as 1726. The society was certainly in existence in 1735, for during that year an arrangement was made for the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Chalker, whose successor was the Rev. Samuel S. Sackett (as supply) in 1742-43, at which time the society was known by the title of Highlands.

The parsonage lot, deeded in 1751, was in reality a Glebe for the support of the minister. The original parsonage house did not stand upon it, but on the land included in the deed of 1739. A new parsonage was erected in 1836, the old one being reported at that time as not worth repair—"the roof was leaky, the siding defective, plastering loose, sills of the lintels rotten, and the chimney a mass of stone saturated with moisture, vermin and corruption." It was probably not less than one hundred years old at that time. In reference to the original church edifice, very little can now be learned beyond the fact that it contained thirty-one pews on the main floor and that it had a seated gallery. This at least was its condition in 1785, on the 7th of February of which year the society elected the following persons as trustees under the general law incorporating religious societies, viz: William Denniston, James Clinton, Samuel Keham, George Denniston, Jas. Kernaghan, William Moffat, Samuel Moffat, Jr., William Edmonston and Joseph Chandler. In a list of "original owners" of pews at that time the following names appear:

No. 1.	Parsonage Pew.	No. 17.	Sylvester White.
" 2.	Leonard Nicoll.	" 18.	James Kernaghan.
" 3.	Isaac Van Duzer.	" 19.	John Denniston.
" 4.	Alexander Denniston.	" 20.	Robert R. Burnet and Wm. Denniston.
" 5.	James Denniston.	" 21.	Samuel Moffat.
" 6.	James Clinton.	" 22.	Nathaniel Burchard.
" 7.	Chris. and Henry Van Duzer.	" 23.	William Moffat.
" 8.	Wm. and Samuel Moffat.	" 24.	Elijah Carpenter.
" 9.	John Nicholson and Gilbert Roberts.	" 25.	Robert Grigg.
" 10.	William Edmonston.	" 26.	William Edmonston.
" 11.	William Grigg.	" 27.	Samuel Ketcham.
" 12.	Zebulon Birdsall.	" 28.	Daniel Harrison.
" 13.	Nathaniel DuBois.	" 29.	Shadrack Van Duzer.
" 14.	Zachariah DuBois.	" 30.	John Ellison.
" 15.	Strong and Matthews.	" 31.	Joseph Chandler.
" 16.	Daniel Clemence.

Enos Chandler, Richard Goldsmith, John Denniston, Daniel Harrison, Samuel Moffat and Daniel Clemence owned seats in the gallery.

In the beginning, the pulpit was supplied quite irregularly by such clergymen as could be procured from time to time. The first settled minister was the Rev. Mr. Chalker, in 1735. He was succeeded by Rev. Saml. S. Sackett (supply 1742-3). Rev. Enos Ayres came as a supply about 1750, and was subsequently settled there until 1762.* Rev. Francis Peppard was his successor in 1767 and served until 1771, when the Rev. John Close, 1773 to 1785 was installed. The Rev. Isaac Lewis served from 1796 to 1800. Rev. Jonathan Freeman followed from 1800 to 1804, when he was succeeded by Rev. Joel T. Benedict. The Rev. Henry Ford, the next pastor, was followed by Rev. Artemas Dean, who served from December, 1813 to April, 1842. Rev. J. B. Hubbard next occupied the pulpit until 1846, when he was succeeded by Rev. John N. Lewis, who remained until July, 1853. He was followed by Rev. Robert H. Beattie from September, 1854, to May, 1866. The Rev. Wm. Holladay came next and remained until 1872. Rev. David J. Atwater, the present pastor, was installed on the first of May, 1873.

During the early years of its existence the First Presbyterian Church of Newburgh and the Presbyterian Church at New Windsor were more or less associated with Bethlehem, if they were not outgrowths from it. The following is of record:

"At a meeting of Elders and several members of the congregation of New Windsor, the 22d of August, 1773, for setting on foot a subscription for raising a salary for the Rev. John Close, in order to the calling him as the stated teacher and pastor of the united congregation of Bethlehem and New Windsor.

"It is agreed, that the congregation stand divided into four districts, as in Mr. Peppard's time (i. e. 1767). That Trustees be appointed in each district in whose names the subscriptions shall be taken for the use of the said Mr. Close; and the following persons were named as Trustees, viz:

New Cornwall District—Joseph Wood, Reuben Clark, Joseph Smith, Daniel Wood, Jeremiah Clark.

Murderer's Creek District—Francis Mandevill, Samuel Brewster, William Roe, Benjamin Case, William Williams.

New Windsor District—John Nicoll, James Clinton, David Halladay, Samuel Brewster, Leonard Nicoll, George Clinton, Judah Harlow, Samuel Logan, Charles Booth.

Newburgh District—Jonathan Hashrouck, Abel Belknap, Moses Higby, El-nathan Foster, Isaac Belknap."

*Mr. Chalker was called by the congregation of Walkkill and Bethlehem. The former society, however, appears to have withdrawn its assent after Mr. Chalker had preached to them as a supply. The Synod minutes say (under date of Sept. 23, 1735): "Mr. Chalker did transport his family from Long Island to the Highlands, being encouraged thereto by the people of Walkkill as well as Bethlehem." Mr. Chalker's stay at Bethlehem was limited, as appears from the minutes of Presbytery of New Brunswick, "Philadelphia, May 29, 1742—Mr. Sackett to supply the Highlands the one half of his time, and Crompond and White Plains the other half." Oct. 12, 1743—Application being made to the Presbytery in behalf of the Highlands for supply, Mr. Sackett is appointed to supply them as often as he can."

History of Newburgh.

The association for the support of a pastor, which apparently originated in 1767, was continued until the close of Mr. Freeman's administration, during which time the societies at Newburgh and New Windsor Village had attained sufficient strength to maintain a minister—Rev. Eleazer Burnet and the Rev. John Johnson serving them until 1810.

The church edifice was rebuilt in 1828, and has recently been re-seated and considerably improved. The original burying ground was enlarged in 1868, and the additional ground divided into lots, several of which exhibit modern arrangement and monuments.

NEW WINDSOR PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The New Windsor Presbyterian Church dates its organization from September 14, 1764, at which time Joseph Wood, William Lawrence, Samuel Brewster, and Henry Smith were chosen elders. It was formally constituted May 5, 1766, by the Rev. Timothy Johnes, a committee of the Presbytery of New York. From the date of its constitution until 1805, it was associated with the Newburgh and Bethlehem societies in the support of a pastor, and from 1805 to 1810, with the latter. From 1810 to 1827, it enjoyed only occasional ministerial labors. On May 1, 1827, the Rev. James H. Thomas was employed in connection with the church at Canterbury, and was installed pastor of both churches February 12, 1828. The connection with the Canterbury church was dissolved in 1834, Mr. Thomas serving the New Windsor church exclusively until June, 1835. Rev. James Sherwood was installed pastor August 5th, 1835, and continued in that relation until April, 1840. The pulpit was subsequently occupied by supplies—Rev. N. S. Prince, Rev. Henry Belden, Rev. Isaac C. Beach, and Rev. James Bruyn. For several years past there has been no service held, although we believe a church organization is maintained. For its connection with the Bethlehem church, and also with the Presbyterian Church of Newburgh, the reader is referred to the history of the latter church in the history of Newburgh.

The first building erected by the society was a small structure in the village of New Windsor. It is said that it was occupied as a hospital during the encampment, and was subsequently destroyed by fire. The present edifice was erected in 1807. It is a small wooden structure with spire, and adjoins the present village on the west. In the ancient burial ground which forms a part of its real estate, the oldest monument is that which records the resting place of John Yelverton, one of the founders of the village, who died June 12, 1767, aged (74) years.

LITTLE BRITAIN CHURCH.

The Associate Reformed Church of Little Britain, familiarly known as the "Little Britain Church," was one of the organized results of the missionary labors of Rev. Robert Annan, who came over from Scotland in 1761, and who, before the expiration of ten years, established preaching stations throughout the district from Little Britain to Bloomingburgh. In 1765, societies of sufficient strength had been formed at Little Britain and in Walkkill to erect houses of worship, and to warrant the calling, in 1767, of Mr. Annan to become their settled pastor, in which relation he was installed October 2, 1772, the societies being then and for many years subsequently the "Associate Reformed Church of Little Britain" and the "Associate Reformed Church of Neelytown."* Whatever may have been the status of the former from the advent of Mr. Annan in 1761 to the year 1765, its records date from September 11th of the latter year, when Patrick McClaughry sold to James Jackson, Matthew McDool (McDowell) and Andrew Crawford, a tract or parcel of land containing one acre, one road, and twenty-three perches, being part of the patent to Andrew Johnston, the intention of the purchasers, as expressed in the deed, being "to erect a meeting house thereupon to be appropriated to Divine service in the public worship of God, for the use of a Presbyterian minister and congregation in connection with the Associate Presbytery in Pennsylvania." On the site thus purchased a church edifice was erected, and was occupied by the congregation until 1826. It was a square building with a barrack roof. The entrance was by two doors on the east, on each side of which were stairs leading to galleries on the north and south sides. The pulpit was on the west and was of the old-fashioned high structures with a sounding board. On each side of the pulpit were square pews with seats on all sides so that part of the occupants had to sit with their backs to the minister. In front of the pulpit and between that and the door were long seats or slips, on each side of which were continued the box pews. On the south side of the pulpit the first pew was owned by the McDowells; the second by Robert Burnet; the next and corner pew by the Shaws and Kernochans. As it was not fully completed inside for several years after it was enclosed, descriptive recollections vary somewhat. Outside, the south and west sides were shingled; the west and north clapboarded. One peculiarity it maintained among the early settlers—it was universally called “The Meeting House.” In 1826, it gave place to the building which is now occupied.

The first elders of the church were Matthew McDool (McDowell), Patrick McClaughry, and John Waugh. The first pastor was the Rev. Robert Annan, who was in charge in 1768. The records of the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania state:

“August 31 1762, Mr. Robert Annan was called to the exercise of the pastoral office in the congregations of Makle Creek and Cunawago in Pennsylvania, and on the 8th of June, 1763, he was ordained and installed. April 15th, 1767, he was called to “the congregations of Little Britain and Wallkill.” April 21, 1768, the pastoral relation between him and the congregations of March Creek and Cunawago was dissolved and on October 2, 1772 he was installed pastor ‘of the United Associate congregations of Little Britain and Wallkill.’”

Mr. Annan served the Little Britain and Neelytown (Wallkill) congregations until about 1783, when he removed to Boston. His successor was Rev. Thomas J. Smith, who was installed May 1, 1791. On his retirement the pastorate was vacant until 1812, when the Rev. James Scrimgeour, who had served as pastor of the Associate Reformed Church of Newburgh from 1803, was installed. He remained in the charge until his death, Feb. 4, 1825. Rev. Robert H. Wallace was his successor, Oct. 6, 1825, and served until his death, when he was succeeded by his son, Rev. R. Howard Wallace, who is now pastor.

The original Presbyterial connection of the church was maintained until a recent date when it united with the “Old School” branch of Presbyterians.

UNION M. E. CHURCH, VAIL'S GATE.

The M. E. Church at Vail's Gate is called in old records the “Union Church of New Windsor,” a name which was probably intended to imply that it was a neighborhood church in which professors of every creed had a common interest. It was the outgrowth of what was known in 1789 as the John Ellison class. Ellison had formerly belonged to the Church of England, which at that time had no organization in the vicinity, and hence he was readily led to give encouragement to the substitute which the Methodist Episcopal Church offered, embracing, as the creed of the latter did substantially, the creed of the Church of England of which it was originally a branch. In 1791, Mr. Ellison erected a building near his residence at Monticello, the first story of which he occupied as a store and the second he fitted up as a hall for religious services. While itinerant preachers of all denominations were permitted to occupy the hall, it was especially reserved for those of the Methodist Church from which it became known as the Methodist Church. It was occupied by the Union Church until 1807, when the present building, which had been somewhat modernized since its erection, was constructed, and now forms the oldest church edifice of the denomination on the west bank of the Hudson River. In 1809, it was made the head of the New Windsor circuit, with Rev. Thomas Woolsey and James Coleman, preachers. At the quarterly conference of that year, held in the new Union Church, then the only one in the circuit, Andrew Cunningham and Benjamin Westlake appeared as local preachers, and Henry Still, James Benjamin, Thomas Collard and Jonathan Stephens as exhorters. The circuit embraced New Windsor, Sugar Loaf, Smith's Clove, Lower Clove, Oxford, Warwick, Amity, Bullet Hill, Ketchamtown, Pochuck, Newfoundland, Deepark, New Shawangunk (Bethel), Hamburg, Bellvale, Vernon and Cornwall. This circuit, which will be recognized as covering a wide district of country, was subsequently divided and subdivided until it has finally substantially disappeared, only the society at Mountainville now being included with it. The first trustees of the church were elected April 6, 1804, and were Daniel Holmes and Samuel Fowler of Newburgh, and Jabish Atwater (Atwood?), Samuel Dusingberry and Henry Still of New Windsor. The following list of circuit preachers from 1790* to 1880 was prepared by Rev. N. S. Tuthill:

1790—Benjamin Abbott, Joseph Lowell.	1801—Samuel Fowler, Mathias Swain, David Best.
1791—Jetter Johnson, Joshua Taylor.	1802—James Herron.
1792—Samuel Fowler, Lawrence McCombs.	1803—Thomas Stratton, Mitchell E. Bull.
1793—Lawrence McCombs, Smith Weeks.	1804—Robert Dillon, Isaac Candee.
1794—Samuel Fowler, Moses Crane, Wm. Storms.	1805—Zenas Coxel, Isaac Candee.
1795—Matthias Swain, Daniel Buck.	1806—Asa Cummins, Wm. Keith.
1796—Jacob Egbert, John Finnegan.	1807—John Crowthord, Wm. Keith.
1797—Samuel Fowler, Thomas Woolsey.	1808—John Robertson, J. Coleman, Wm. Jewett.
1798-9—Robert Green, Wm. Storms.	1809—Thomas Woolsey, James Coleman.
1800—Samuel Fowler, Elijah Woolsey.	1810—Samuel Fowler, Samuel Bushnell.

*From 1790 to 1800 the church was in the Newburgh Circuit. The New Windsor Circuit was established in the latter year.

LITTLE BRITAIN M. E. CHURCH.

Information solicited in regard to the history of this church has not been furnished. The records of the trustees (which we have been permitted to examine through the kindness of Wm. R. Weed, Esq.) begin July 26, 1853, at which time the erection of a church edifice, thirty-four feet front by forty-four feet deep, was under contract with Harvey Alexander. The building appears to have been completed and occupied in the fall of 1854. It is near Jackson Avenue and has a burial ground attached. The society is now in a circuit with Gardnertown.

BURIAL GROUNDS.

In addition to the New Windsor Presbyterian Church burial ground, noticed in connection with that church, there is one attached to the Vail's Gate M. E. Church, one attached to the Little Britain Church, one attached to the Little Britain M. E. Church and one known as the "Mullinder Graveyard," west of Little Britain Church. There are quite a number of family burial plots, including those known as the Clinton, the McClaughry and the Belknap, and nearly all of them are in a wretched condition.

Woodlawn Cemetery, in charge of an association organized under the State law, is being rapidly improved. It is located in the northeast part of the town, nearly adjoining the City of Newburgh. The remains of many persons have been removed to it from other grounds, both in Newburgh and New Windsor, and many respectable monuments have been erected.

The burial grounds attached to the Goodwill Church and to the Neelytown Church contain the remains of many New Windsor families.

On the farm of Adam G. Buchanan, in Little Britain, stands a solitary monument, although other graves are marked by its side, on which the inscription reads:

"In memory of Matthew McDowel, deceased, who departed this life on the 23d day of July, A. D. 1787, aged 72 years."

McDowell, then a boy was one of the Clinton immigrants of 1730, and one of the founders of the Little Britain Church.

CHAPTER IX.

JOHN HUMPHREY.

Very little information can now be obtained in reference to the family history of John Humphrey. It is believed that he was a native of England, and that he was the first settler in Little Britain, his name appearing on the taxroll of 1724,* and on the military roll of 1738. James Humphrey, who seems to have been his son, gave testimony in 1785 that he was then 71 years of age and had lived in Little Britain 65 years, which would carry date of settlement back to 1720. Hugh Humphrey, had lived in Little Britain since his birth in 1724. He had several children, among whom were John, James, David, Robert, Hugh and Agnes. The latter married Col. James McClaughrey in 1763 and died without issue in 1808, in her 65th year. It was at the house of John Humphrey, Jr., that the precinct of New Windsor was organized in 1763. James (known as Capt. James) lived on his father's place, where he died in 1793, in his 79th year. His wife, Jane, died in 1789; aged 71 years. Robert died in New Windsor, Nov. 30, 1840, aged upwards of 90 years. The town has never been without resident descendants of the first settler, and although without distinction in the professions or in political life, they have not been without honor as citizens.

PETER MULLINDER.

The Mullinder or Mulliner family has been continued in Little Britain since the settlement of Peter Mulliner in 1724-5. He was an immigrant of an earlier date, however, his wife Anne, having received a patent for 1,000 acres of land in Plattekill, Ulster County, in 1718. One tradition is that he was of Norman-English extraction and connected with the nobility of England, and that, rather than submit to the will of his father and learn a trade, he ran away and came to America; that Governor Burnet employed him to superintend some of his landed interests in the Highlands, and that, while so employed, he married a daughter of one of the Palatine settlers of Newburgh. Burnet was governor in 1720, and the Palatines came to Newburgh in 1709. The dates would afford opportunity for the accomplishment of the tradition, and his name is in itself evidence of his Norman blood. His farm at Little Britain adjoined that of John Humphrey on the south. He built his first log cabin on the north side of his lot near a spring; the remains of the cellar can be seen at the present time (1886). He afterwards built on the south side of the main road that runs through the farm, opposite the late residence of his grandson, William Mulliner. He was a member of the Church of England. His neighbors, the Burnets, Falls, Clintons, etc., were Dissenters. Their intercourse with him during the week, when they met on business or otherwise, was always cordial; but on Sundays they would not speak. His old farm, on the death of his grandson, William, in 1840, was sold and went out of the name. He had six children. His eldest son, Peter, never married; Elizabeth married an Oliver; Sarah married Isaac Bull, son of William Bull of Hamptonburgh; Mary married John Welling, and Rachel married Geo. Falls, (1760); William married Mary Denniston, daughter of Alexander Denniston,(1) sister of James(1) and of Colonel George Denniston, and lived and died on his father's place. He died young and after his death, his widow married Matthew DuBois. He left two children, a son, William, and a daughter, Elizabeth. The latter married Charles Clinton, son of Genl. James Clinton, and died in New York Aug. 15, 1865, in her 96th year. She had three children: Maria DeWitt, Alexander, (Dr.), and Ann Eliza; William married first, Elizabeth Dill, second, Lydia Stewart. He had nine children by his first wife and four by his second: 1, Caleb; 2, William; 3, Franklin;* 4, Alexander C.; 5, Marcus; 6, James D.; 7, Peter; 8, Mary, (married Geo. drew Johnston patent in 1729. His farm was north of that subsequently owned by Alexander Denniston.

*There is little room for doubt. The land conveyed to him by Patrick Hume, was surveyed by Caldwellader Colden in 1724. His associate purchaser was James Gemball. The latter, however, was not added to the tax roll until 1726.

He had three daughters: Ann, who married Robert Burnet; Mary who married Patrick McClaughrey, and Jean, who married James Burns, a blacksmith. His will bears date April 2, 1768. He gave his landed estate to his daughters—one hundred acres to Mrs. Burnet; seventy acres to Mrs. McClaughrey, with his home, barn and orchard, and seventy acres to William, Mary, Catharine and Jean Burns, children of his youngest daughter. His will reads: "But in case any of said four children shall at any time marry or cohabit with any papist, or notorious drunkard, or profane swearer, then said child or children shall forfeit all right and title to said land, and the said child or children's part so forfeited shall be given by my executors unto such child or children as shall behave regularly and free of said scandals. He died in the spring of 1771. The land willed to the children of Jean is now owned by Mr. Graham, formerly by Hamilton Denniston. Through his daughter, Mrs. Burnet and Mrs. McClaughry. Mr. Reid has descendants in numbers beyond enumeration.

THE BURNET FAMILY.

Robert Burnet, the progenitor of the Burnet family of Little Britain, came from Scotland near Edinburgh, about the year 1725. He first settled at Raritan, County of Somerset, N. J., where he followed his trade as a tailor. In the year 1729, he purchased of John Parker and Andrew Johnston, merchants of Perth Amboy, 200 acres of the Andrew Johnston patent, lying south of the main road and adjoining the farm previously purchased by Peter Mullinder, "for sixty pounds current money of the said province of New Jersey at eight shillings per £." Accompanied by his brother, who subsequently returned to New Jersey, he erected a log cabin* and made preparations for clearing and cultivation. He was also accompanied by John Reid, who purchased an adjoining farm lot and whose daughter, Ann, soon after became his wife. He was a Scot of pure type, six feet, two inches in height; a firm Presbyterian, and a rigid disciplinarian. He left by will the farm, on which he lived, to his two oldest sons, James and John, to be equally divided between them; to his other children he gave land which he owned in other places. He died in the year 1774, in the 73d year of his age.

*This log cabin was on the southwest part of his farm, near a spring on the farm now of Joseph B. Burnet. He afterwards built a more commodious house on the other side of his land, now the farm of J. C. Terwilliger, where he resided until his death.

Seven children were the issue of his marriage, viz: 1, James; 2, John; 3, Robert; 4, Thomas; 5, Patrick; 6, Sarah; 7, Mary.

James (1), the oldest son, was born Jan. 25th, 1732. He married Mary, daughter of John Nicholson, about the year 1760. He was a man of good reputation. During the Revolution he served as an ensign in Capt. McClaughrey's company of militia and was on his way to Fort Montgomery with reinforcements when the fort was taken by the British. He remained some days in the mountains near the fort collecting the men who escaped from the enemy, and then joined Genl. James Clinton at the Square and marched to the defence of Kingston. He lived on the farm left him by his father until 1801, when he sold it to his son Robert, and with his wife removed to the residence of his grandson George, near Little Britain Church, where he died Dec. 23d, 1807, at the age of 75 years. His wife died July 28th, 1808, aged 60 years. His children were: 1, Robert; 2, Ann; 3, Elizabeth; 4, Sarah; 5, Chas.; 6, James; 7, Thomas; 8, Mary; 9, Margaret; 10, George.

John (2), married Gertrude - _____. He was an officer in the War of the Revolution, and actively engaged on the frontiers of Orange and Ulster Counties, and under Genl. Clinton in Sullivan's campaign against the Six Nations.* He resided on the farm left him by his father (now occupied by Joseph B. Burnet). In 1785 he sold twenty-five acres to his nephew, Robert Burnet, and in 1791, the remainder to the same party, and with his family removed to the western part of New York. He had four children: William and Frederick, and two daughters, Elizabeth, one of his daughters married Charles Humphrey.

Robert (3), married Nancy, daughter of Patrick McClaughry. He had five children: 1. Henry; 2. William; 3. Abner; 4. Samuel; 5. Jane—the latter married James Davis. He first settled on a farm south of Little Britain Church (now owned by R. Wallace Genung), but subsequently exchanged it for a farm in Hamptonburgh, on which he died.

Thomas (4), known as "Uncle Blind Tommy," married a Johnston. He resided on a farm which his grandfather, John Reid, willed to his mother, Ann (Reid) Burnet. About 1794 he sold the place to John McLean and removed with his family to Western New York, in the vicinity of his brother John.* He had seven children: 1, John; 2, Benjamin; 3, Robert; 4, James; 5, Isaac; 6, Elizabeth; 7, Margaret.

*Lossing, in his "Field Book of the Revolution," (vol 2, p. 117) refers to a letter written by Washington to Genl. Greene, dated "Newburgh, 6th July, 1782," in which he speaks of Major Burnet. The person referred to was Major John Burnet here mentioned, and not Robert Burnet to whom Mr. Lossing applies the reference. The latter was second lieutenant in Col. Lamb's Artillery at that time. John was a major in the Militia, and a second lieutenant in Continental Army and as such filed his claim for bounty lands.

Patrick (5) married Keziah Cook. He had two children: 1, George, died 1797, aged 23 years; 2, Robert, died 1803, in his 27th year, leaving a son Hiram. He died on his farm north of Little Britain Square, March 27, 1825, in his 75th year, and his wife, Keziah, died May 12, 1822, in her 74th year. His grandson, Hiram, sold the homestead in 1850, and removed to Wisconsin.

Sarah (6) married Henry ManNeely (his second wife). She had two sons, David and Robert, and one daughter, Ruth, who married William McDabiel.

Mary (7) married Neil McCarty. They lived in Little Britain where Mrs. McCarty died in 1831, at the age of over 90 years. She had six children: 1, John; 2, Alexander; 3, Neil; 4, Henry; 5, Nancy; 6, Mary. Alexander and Henry were printers. Alexander was in the employ of Solomon Southwick at Albany on the "Plough Boy," and Henry worked on "The Index," in Newburgh. Nancy married a Gray, and Mary married Samuel Finley, son of John Finley, an early settler on Hume's Patent.

The number of the children of Robert and Ann (Reid) Burnet was seven, and of their grandchildren, thirty-four. Dispersed as the latter became, a record of their descendants would be obtained with no little difficulty. Attention is therefore confined to a single branch, that of Robert, the oldest son of James, a branch which has retained the ancient homestead and gathered around it a large local representation. Robert was born in Little Britain, February 22d, 1762. He resided with his father until his fifteenth year, and attended the school of the Rev. John Moffat. When the Revolution came on he joined a military company, mainly composed of boys of from fourteen to sixteen years of age, for home protection, and with this company was several times under arms,

*John Burnet and his brother Thomas removed to what was called the "Genesee Country." Other parties went from the neighborhood at the same time, among the number Oliver and Charles Humphrey and David Boyd. The Humphreys were grandsons of John Humphrey, the first settler on the Johnston patent. Charles Humphrey was Major Burnet's son-in-law. They located in the present town of Phelps, Ontario County. Charles, James, Thomas and George Burnet also removed to the same vicinity.

This school was known as "Moffat's Academy," from the fact that he gave instruction in the higher branches. It was the only school in the neighborhood and drew its pupils in some cases from patrons nine and ten miles distant. It was situated on the road leading from Little Britain to Washingtonville on the place now (1879) owned by Robert Shaw. The house was one story and a half with basement. The school was kept in the upper rooms. Mr. Moffat's family, consisting of his wife and two daughters, occupying the basement. It was partly if not wholly broken up during the Revolution.

and especially assisted in guarding the Hessian prisoners from Burgoyne's army in 1777, who, on their march through Little Britain, encamped for a night at Major Telford's tavern opposite the Burnet homestead. In June, 1781, then nineteen years of age, he received from Gov. Clinton a commission as second lieutenant in Colonel Lamb's regiment of artillery, then stationed at West Point, and with his regiment at the capture of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Returning with the regiment to West Point, he remained there until the disbandment of the army, and commanded the rear guard in the march into the city of New York as the British evacuated it in November, 1783, where, after bidding Washington farewell, at Fraunce's tavern, he folded up his epaulette and laid it away—a memorial which is still preserved. While stationed at West Point, he was one of the delegates appointed to meet Washington at the Temple (March, 1783), and participated in the proceedings on that occasion. He was also present at a meeting of officers for the organization of the Society of the Cincinnati, of which he became a member.* Released from military duty, he immediately entered upon his life-work at Little Britain. On the 9th of June, 1784, he married Rachael DeWitt, and in 1785, purchased twenty acres from his uncle, Major John Burnet, and commenced housekeeping in the log cabin which his grandfather had occupied on his first settlement. In 1791, he purchased the remainder of his uncle's farm and took possession of the house which the latter had built. In 1801, he purchased of his father, James, one hundred acres, and thus became the owner of the original homestead of two hundred acres. In 1804, he erected the commodious mansion in which he resided at his death, now owned (1886) by his grandson, Joseph B. Burnet. He took an active part in the business affairs of his native town and county; was Justice of the Peace and Town Clerk for a number of years, and Member of Assembly for two terms, 1800 and 1804. He was frequently an executor and an administrator of estates, among others of the estate of General James Clinton and of Moses DeWitt, the latter, his wife's brother. In person he was tall and erect, with a kindly face and presence—a man whose integrity was never questioned.

*At the time of his death he was the last surviving, original member of the Society, as well as the last surviving officer of the army of the Revolution. He died Nov. 24th, 1854, in his 93d year. His wife Rachael DeWitt was the daughter of Jacob Rutsen DeWitt of Peenpack, Mrs. Genl. James Clinton's brother. The acquaintance which resulted in her marriage is said to have come through her visits to her aunt and especially from the continued residence of her father's family at Genl. Clinton's after the Brandt raid on Minisink in 1779. The General's son, Alexander and young Burnet were especially intimate and entered the army together. Mrs. Burnett was a most excellent woman, and is especially remembered in her later years as a rotund, rosy-checked dame, who spoke the English language with a Dutch accent and idioms.

Rachel DeWitt died June 4th, 1830, in her 68th year. Their children were:

1. Alexander Clinton, born Dec. 9th, 1785; married Mary Ann Curtis, Dec. 19th, 1807, and had thirteen children: 1, Robert; 2, Curtis; 3, Moses DeWitt; 4, Sylvester; 5, Jacob; 6, Rutsen; 7, Alexander; 8, Charles; 9, Rachel Ann; 10, Sarah; 11, Mary Jane; 12, Ann Eliza; 13, James Alexander. Alexander Clinton died Dec. 2, 1845, aged 60 years, his wife, Ann Curtis, is also deceased.

2. Charles, born July 13th, 1787; married first, Elizabeth Brown, May 3rd, 1810. She died Jan. 7th, 1814, aged 23 years, leaving two children: 1, Rachel DeWitt and 2, James. He married second, Mary Ann, daughter of Capt. Joseph Barber of Montgomery, May 13th, 1817, and had five children: 1, Joseph B.; 2, Jane Ann; 3, Charles Fowler; 4, Helen Eliza; 5, Robert, died in infancy. He died Nov. 9th, 1869, in his 83d year, and his wife, Mary Ann Barber, died February 19th, 1875, in her 82d year.

3. Jane, born June 18th, 1789; married first, Samuel Crawford, Dec. 15th, 1807. He died August 10th, 1810, leaving 1, Eunice Watkins Crawford, who married Dr. James VanKeuren. She married second, Capt. John Finley, May 12th, 1812, and had 1, James; 2, Robert; 3, John; 4, Samuel; 5, Mary Elizabeth. Robert Samuel and Mary Elizabeth are dead (1879). She died Oct. 25th, 1857, aged 68 years; her husband, Capt. John Finley, died March 9th 1839, aged 66 years. 2. Francis Crawford, known as Francis Crawford, Jr., who married and resided in Newburgh, from whence he removed to Detroit, Mich., where he died.

4. Moses DeWitt, born Jan. 13th, 1792, married first, Margaret, daughter of John Barber, July 16, 1817. She died April 14th, 1818, in her 27th year, leaving one son, the present (1879) John Barber Burnet of Syracuse. He married second, Mrs. Helen Creed, of Syracuse. He was in service in the war of 1812, and was subsequently Sheriff of Orange County. He removed to Syracuse, where his uncle, Moses DeWitt was largely interested in real estate, and died there Dec. 29th, 1876, in his 85th year. His wife, Helen, died April 27th, 1874, aged 76 years.

5. Mary DeWitt, born Dec. 1st, 1795; married Samuel Hall, August 27, 1814, and had six children: 1, Margaret DeWitt; 2, Mary Jane; 3, Robert Burnet; 4, Rachel Ann; 5, Moses DeWitt; 6, John James. She died Oct. 28th, 1874, aged 46 years; her husband, Samuel Hall, is also dead.

6. Robert, Jr., born May 6th, 1803, died April 23th, 1804

DENNISTON.*

The Denniston family of New Windsor, now widely dispersed, are the descendants of Alexander Denniston, the brother-in-law of Charles Clinton and one of the company of immigrants who settled in Little Britain in 1730. Alexander Denniston, the father of this immigrant, was an officer under St. Ruth, in 1691, at Athlone, and aided in the defence of that place against the English. In this contest the Irish troops defended their works with undaunted bravery. In the final charge, in which the English were repulsed, the Irish troops set fire to the enemy's breastwork, destroying all their defences and pontoons and producing great consternation in the English camp. After the reduction of Athlone, he accompanied St. Ruth to Kilcommeden in Roscommon, where the latter was killed and his forces dispersed. After this battle followed the period in which it is said that "Ireland had no history," a period in which was developed nothing by tyranny on the part of the government and bitter suffering on the part of the people. This induced Denniston to remove to Scotland to avoid threatened persecution. In 1701, he returned to Ireland, where he remained quiet and secluded in the Town of Grenard, until the accession of George I, in 1714, when the Whigs obtained the ascendancy and all adhering to them were taken into favor. In 1727, on the accession of George II, by bills which passed Parliament, five-sixths of the population of Ireland were disfranchised; stringent additions were also made to the penal code, and other legislative action taken which convinced many that Ireland was to be treated as a conquered province, and induced them to emigrate to America. "This," says the author of the foregoing brief sketch, Hon. Goldsmith Denniston, "was the cause of the emigration of what is known as the Clinton company in 1729, among whom was Alexander Denniston, son of the officer under St. Ruth, already described."

Alexander Denniston (1), married first Elizabeth Beatty, who died childless, probably on Cape Cod in 1730, second Frances Little, a fellow passenger on the "George and Anne," daughter of George Little* and sister of James and Archibald Little, by whom he had 1, James, who married first Jane Crawford (marriage license Oct. 11th, 1765), and second Rachel Falls, (marriage license dated Oct. 13, 1773; 2, George

James (2), son of James (1), married Prudence Morrison, daughter of John Morrison and his wife Elizabeth Scott, of what is now the town of Montgomery, and was the father of the late Hon. Robert Denniston. He died July 9, 1825, aged 59 years.

Abraham, son of James (1), married Bathsheba Goldsmith and was the father of the late Goldsmith Denniston, and the late Mrs. Aaron P. Johnes of Newburgh. He died Sept. 10, 1825, aged 55 years.

George (2) was the father of Colonel James Denniston, who was the father of George A. Denniston, for one term Sheriff of Orange County. The sons of William (4) were Isaac,* Andrew and Archibald. This branch of the family settled in Cornwall and gave to its local history a long list of honored names. Archibald, the youngest son of William, removed to Sullivan County and settled in the present Town of Tremont.

He was a native of the county Longford, Ireland, from whence he came to Little Britain in 1798, and soon after opened a store in Newburgh. ity states that he removed to the west, and another, that he settled in Sullivan county, in 1815, in company with Archibald Denniston, referred to in the text. The latter located at a place now known as Denniston's Ford, where he died in 1863."*

Members of the family have had part in all the principal wars of the country. Alexander Denniston (1), the founder of the family, was a member of Capt. Ellison's New Windsor militia in 1738, and on frontier service in the war of 1755; Daniel, was Lieutenant in the 2d N. Y. Continental, 1776, served to the end of the war, was half-pay officer for life, and a member of the Cincinnati; George L., son of Alexander was Adjutant in Col. James Clinton's Southern Ulster militia, (his five brothers were privates in the same regiment), member of the Committee of Safety of New Windsor, 1775, Ensign, 3d N. Y. Continental, 1776, promoted Lieut., served during the war, half-pay officer for life and member of the Cincinnati, and William, was Lieut. in Col. Clinton's Southern Ulster militia, 1776, and Captain of 11th Co., Wallkill Precinct, 1775. The name of another George stands on the rolls as Lieut. in 4th N. Y. Continental, but we fail to place him except as son of George L. The name of the latter, by the way, was George L., and not George I. as entered in several lists.

A complete genealogy of the family has not been preserved, and the details which have been obtained are fragmentary. It is perhaps sufficient to say that the descendants of Alexander Denniston are still numerous in New Windsor, Cornwall and Blooming Grove, and that he has representatives in other towns, in other parts of the state, and in the west. Taken as a whole there have been few families in the state that have been the peers of the soldier under St. Ruth.

David Denniston was, it is believed, the first printer in Newburgh, for, although it is of record that the Newburgh Packet was printed by Lucius Cary in 1795, a book printed the same year by David Denniston is in existence, and his name is associated with the publication of The Mirror and The Rights of Man, of Newburgh, and the American Citizen and Watch Tower, of New York. His occupation was that of a printer and book-binder; his association with newspapers is presumed to have grown out of his interest in the religious discussions of the era in which he lived. The New York Evening Post has the following record of his death: "At Newburgh, Dec. 13, 1803, of an inflammation of the lungs, Mr. David Denniston, late proprietor of the American Citizen." In another announcement his death is recorded as having been from "malignant fever." His proper place in the genealogy of the family has not been ascertained. He was a man of decided strength of character.

Robert Denniston, son of James Denniston and his wife, Prudence Morrison, daughter of John Morrison, and his wife Elizabeth Scott, of the town of Montgomery, was born in what is now the town of Blooming Grove, October 15, 1800. He married first, Julianna Howell, September 24, 1823, who died without issue Feb. 21, 1825. His second wife was Mary Scott, only daughter of William Scott, of Northumberland, England, who settled near Elizabethtown, N. J., in 1795, and subsequently removed to Newburgh. By this marriage he had five sons and six daughters. He served as an officer of militia and as justice of the peace in his native town; was appointed by Governor Marcy judge of the court of common pleas of Orange County; was elected member of the assembly in 1835, and again in 1839 and 1840, and in the fall of the latter year was elected senator in the second senate district, in which position he remained for seven years, during the whole of which time he was chairman of the committee on canals, then a very important committee; by virtue of his office he was also a member of the "court for the trial of impeachments and the correction of errors." In 1859 he was elected comptroller of the State, and at the close of his term retired to his farm in Blooming Grove, where he resided until his death, Dec. 2, 1867. His five sons were in the service of the United States during the Civil War, viz.:

William S., as volunteer surgeon died in the service; Robert, Jr., as paymaster's clerk, died in the service; Henry M. was paymaster in the Navy and has subsequently attained the rank of Rear Admiral, he married Emma J. Dusenberry, they have one son, Robert; James O. was lieutenant in Co. G., 124th Regt., N. Y. S. Volunteers, after the war he entered the ministry and is a Presbyterian minister, he married Margaret Crosby, they have one daughter, Mary; Augustus was quartermaster of the same regiment, and has since served two terms as member of Assembly for the first district of Orange County, has been president of the Orange County Agricultural Society since 1878, and director, vice-president and president of the Highland National Bank of Newburgh and has filled many other positions of honor and trust.

The six daughters of Robert Denniston and his wife Mary Scott were Juliana H., who married Edward Stevens of Buffalo, and died leaving a son who died young, and a daughter Catherine C., who married Frank B. Phillips; Mary S., who married Walter R. Marsh of New York city, and has one daughter, Antoinette, who married Willard C. Reid; Caroline M., unmarried; Jane C., who married R. Emmet Deyo of New York and has four daughters, Cornelia, Juliana, Margaret and Eveline; Abbey L., unmarried, and Agnes, who died in 1868.

Goldsmith Denniston, son of Abraham and grandson of James and Prudence Denniston, was born in the town of New Windsor, where he resided until 1838, when he removed to Newburgh and engaged in mercantile business, from whence he removed to Steuben county. He was elected member of assembly in 1838, and from Steuben county in 1858. He was also judge of the court of common pleas of Orange county from April, 1841, to the expiration of the court under the constitution of 1847. By his wife, Fanny, he had Abraham, Harvey G., and Aaron J. Abraham was born in New Windsor in 1827; enlisted as a volunteer in the 107th Regiment, August, 1862; died in hospital at Washington, Feb. 5th, 1863. Harvey G., born August 23, 1829; enlisted in Co. G, 107th Regiment, August, 1862; promoted second lieutenant; resigned in 1864; subsequently captain of Co. C, 188th Regiment; mustered out July 1, 1865. Aaron J., commissioned second lieutenant Co. D, 188th Regiment, in 1864, but was compelled to resign soon after entering the service.

JOHN LITTLE.

John Little, gentlemen, as written in his will, and Rev. John Little, as of other record, was an early settler in the original town, and gave to his plantation of many acres the name of "Stonefield," where he erected, in 1745, the stone mansion which is still standing and is known as "The Denniston or Robert's House," and in local notings as "Moffat's Academy." The house is now in the town of Blooming Grove, near Salisbury Mills. His sister, Fanny, was the wife of Alexander Denniston, and Alexander Denniston's sister was the wife of Charles Clinton, from which fact it is presumed that he was one of the Clinton company who immigrated from Ireland in 1729-30. After his death his mansion was occupied by his son-in-law, Rev. John Moffat, who conducted therein a private school. James Denniston bought the property from the heirs of John Moffat, and sold to James Roberts.

Very little is known of Rev. John Little. By his wife, Frances, who survived him, he had, as noted in his will, dated Feb. 21, 1753, five daughters, viz: 1, Elizabeth; 2, Frances, who married John Nicoll, of New Windsor, and had son, Isaac, who was Sheriff of Orange County during the Revolution and executed Claudius Smith, the noted partizan; 3, Elinor, who married John McGarra, of Cornwall, and had son, John; 4, Hannah, who married David Gallatian, of what is now Walden, and had sons John and David, as named in will of John Little, and presumably James, who administered the estate of David in 1760; 5, Margaret, who married Rev. John Moffat, as stated above, and had son, John Little Moffat, who located in Goshen prior to the Revolution; Elizabeth, married, it is presumed, John McLean, of Cornwall, in 1762, as per marriage license dated June 10th of that year. It is said that Rev. John Moffat has no descendants now residents of Orange County. John Nicoll was married twice. From his son, Isaac, he was represented in the war of the Rebellion by Captain Isaac Nicoll, of Bloomington Grove. David Gallatian was the holder of a patent for 1,000 acres of land on the west side of Wallkill river, at Walden, June 14, 1719. His grandson (?) James conducted a mill at Walden, and descendants are still met in Orange County. John McGarrahan has, or did have until recently, descendants bearing his name in the town of Monroe. John McLean, 2d, was a paymaster in the army of the Revolution, and later Commissary-General of the state of New York, although this is not certain.

The descendants of Rev. John Little, through his daughters, were among the most useful and substantial members of the Colonial era.

THE ELLISON FAMILY.

The Ellisons, of New Windsor, are the descendants of Cuthbert Ellison, of New Castle-on-Tyne, merchant, sheriff of New Castle in 1544, and mayor in 1549-54; died 1580. His children were Robert, William, George, and Cuthbert. The latter was the father of Benjamin, who was the father of Robert, who was the father of John, born February 11, 1647.

John Ellison emigrated from New Castle-on-Tyne, England, accompanied by his sister, Elizabeth Finch, and her two daughters, in 1688,* during the reign of James II. In 1691, after a legal residence of three years, he was admitted a freeman of the city of New York, where he became a merchant, and amassed what for those times was a large fortune. The city then was of small dimensions, the business portion lying about Broad and Bridge streets. Broadway was laid out, and extended from the foot of Bowling Green to the Palisades at Wall street, erected to prevent the incursions of the Indians. It contained forty-five houses. Mr. Ellison made his principal investments in real estate in the business part of the town, near the Great Dock, and what is now known as Whitehall. In 1703, he purchased of Matthew Hutchins a piece of land described as being "in the country" and "without the north gate of the city," bounded by Little Queen street, Thames and Lombard street, the latter being its easterly boundary, and extending thence to Hudson's river. Here he erected dwellings and built a wharf; the maps of 1728 show the Ellison dock, it being one of the four at that time existing on the west side of the city. Portions of this purchase still remain in the possession of his descendants.

*The fact remains unexplained that among the inhabitants of Hempstead, L. I., in 1673, were John Ellison and John Ellison, Jr. Thomas Ellison and Thomas Ellison, Jr., and Richard Ellison.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., i, 658. There is remarkable similarity in the names whatever may have been the family connection, if any.

In 1718, to secure the payment of a certain sum of money loaned to William Sutherland, he received from that person the deeds of a tract of land "lying in the precinct of the Highlands, at a place afterwards called New Windsor." This property was the southerly third part of what is known as the "Chambers and Sutherland patent."* His title was perfected in 1723, at which time his son, Thomas, was living upon it. He died in 1724, leaving a widow, Eleanor, and four sons: 1, John; 2, Thomas; 3, William; and 4, Joseph. The two former continued the mercantile business established by their father, while the two latter (William and Joseph) followed the sea, making voyages to the West Indies and South America. John (1) married Mary Van Imburgh, daughter of Gysbert Van Imburgh, who lived in "The Broadway." He died in 1725, leaving two children, John and Mary. John married Mary Wessels, and Mary married John Jeffreys. William (3) married Mary ———, and left but one child, a daughter, who married Robert Cromeline. Joseph (4) married Margaret ———. He died in 1733 without issue.

Thomas (2), in whose history we are more immediately interested, was born in 1701. He was married in 1723, by Rev. Mr. Bull, Dutch minister, in New York, to Margaret, daughter of Francis Garrabrant, merchant. He immediately removed to the property at New Windsor, purchased by his father, and commenced improving it. From the description in the survey made at the time—"commencing at a certain tree on the shore and running thence directly into the woods"—it will be inferred that the tract was mainly in its primal condition. His house, a Dutch cottage in style—which nearly sixty years afterwards became the headquarters of Washington—was situated on a bluff overlooking the river, and was probably erected about 1723-4 He also built

There is a tradition that he first lived in a log house, but such was not the fact. The log house was built for his negro slaves, a number of whom were settled upon the property some six months before he came to reside upon it. The occupations of the homestead by Washington is referred to in another part of this volume.

a dock and a large warehouse, established a line of sloops from thence to his father's, at the foot of Little Queen street, and became in a few years the principal merchant and banker, not only of the neighborhood, but of a very considerable portion of the district now embraced in the county of Orange. In 1754, he erected the old stone building known as the "Ellison House," near Vail's Gate, after the style of the farm houses of his English forefathers; the mason was Wm. Bull (husband of Sarah Wells, the reputed first white woman on the Wawayanda patent). At the same time he built the mill where for very many years was converted into flour and meal the grain of the inhabitants of a large section of country, and whose busy wheel continued in motion for over a century. The old house, though so many years have elapsed since its foundations were laid, is still as sound as ever, and bids fair to last another century. It is one and a half stories high with dormor windows and irregular roof. The chimneys are very massive, covering nearly one side of a room, and are entirely covered with paneling; the original fire-places very large and adapted to the burning of wood. At the time of the occupation of this neighborhood by the American army, the mansion became the headquarters of General Knox,* and on a window of the parlor, scratched with a diamond, is still to be seen, the names of three of the belles of Revolutionary times—Sally Janson, Getty Winkoop and Maria Colden.

There were few larger landed proprietors. In addition to the Sutherland tract, he purchased, in 1724, the Vincent Matthews patent of 800 acres adjoining. In 1737 a patent for about 2,000 acres, in three several parcels, was granted him by the government; in 1750 he obtained patent for six several parcels embracing 3,554 acres, and in 1753 patents for two parcels embracing 1,080 acres; at the latter date he was also granted patent for 31 acres of land under water at New Windsor, covering the entire front of his property on the Hudson to a distance of 600 feet from high-water mark. The record of his land purchases in addition to the foregoing is altogether too voluminous for publication in this connection.

When he first came to New Windsor, he was appointed Deputy Queen's Ranger under Cadwallader Colden, an office involving no little local administration. In 1738 he was captain of "the foot company of military of the precinct of the Highlands"; and in 1756 he was commissioned colonel of the second regiment of militia of Ulster county, continuing his duties in that capacity until the outbreak of the Revolution in 1775. His command was in service on the western frontiers of the county against the Indians, and also in the expedition for the relief of Fort Wm. Henry in 1757. He was also a local magistrate.

He died in 1784, at the advanced age of 79 years, nearly sixty years of his life having been spent in New Windsor. His wife died in 1783. He was the father of eleven children, seven of whom survived him, viz:

1. Elizabeth, born in 1726, married Cadwallader Colden, Jr., of Coldenham. They had twelve children, of whom three died in infancy, and three before reaching maturity.* Her surviving children were: Cadwallader, Thomas, Alexander, David, Alice, Margaret.

2. Margaret, born 1728, married John Crooke.

3. Eleanor, born 1730, died unmarried.

4. Thomas, born 1732, married Mary Reek, of New York.

5. Mary, born 1733, died unmarried.

6. John, born 1736, married Catharine Johnson, of Kingston.

7. William, born 1739, married Mary Floyd, of Long Island.

Margaret (2), who married John Crooke, had but one child, a daughter. Her father dying when quite young, she was brought up by her grandfather. She married Rev. Charles Inglis, an English clergyman attached to Trinity church in New York.

Thomas (4), after having served his father for a number of years, went to New York, where, in connection with his father and brothers

*Her husband writes of her in 1796: "She is of the name of Ellison, an English family, the most respectable then in this neighborhood, and also wealthy. We have now lived together about fifty years, and, I believe, no fifty years were spent happier by any one pair."—Eager's Orange Co. 247.

Charles Inglis, D. D., was born in 1734. He conducted a free school at Lancaster, Pa., from 1755 to 1758, when he was recommended to the Bishop of London for orders. On receiving ordination in England, he returned to America in July, 1759, and entered on his mission as pastor to the church of Dover, Pa. Here he lost his first wife. Sometime after this he removed to New York, where he became assistant to the Rev. Dr. Auchmuty, in 1765, whom he succeeded in 1777. He was an active leader in the cause of the crown, and refused the request to omit prayers for the King on the occasion of Washington's visit to Trinity. Pending the outbreak of hostilities he removed (1775) his family, then consisting of his second wife and three children, Mrs. Crooke, (his mother-in-law), and four servants to Goshen for safety. In 1776 he obtained permission from the Provincial Convention, of New York, for their return to New York by flag of truce, and they accordingly returned, (via New Windsor), in one of Mr. Ellison's sloops. Having been included in the act of attainder of 1779, the return of peace rendered it obligatory on him to leave the States. He accordingly accompanied some loyalists of his congregation to Annapolis, N. S. He was consecrated Bishop of that Province on the 12th Aug., 1787, and was appointed member of the Provincial Council in 1809. He died in 1816, aged 82 years. His son John was the third Protestant Bishop of Nova Scotia.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., iii, 1006, ck. Prov Com. N. Y., 1, 1746, 748; ii 249. Hawkins' Missions. One of his daughters married Judge Haleburton, author of "Sam Slick," etc. In 1778 he procured the release of Major DuBois, of Salisbury's Mills, taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery, and had him sent home on parole.

John and William, in New Windsor, he carried on a large business in breadstuffs. His place of business was at Coenties and Old Slip, and his residence in later years at 13 Broadway. He became a man of large wealth, and at his death, in 1796, left to the Episcopal church in New Windsor a generous endowment. His family servants were all remembered; those too old to enjoy freedom were provided for for the rest of their days. He left no children.

John (6), inherited that portion of his father's landed estate lying about what is now Vail's Gate. He took possession of the old stone mansion erected by his father at that place and lived therein until his death in 1814. In religious belief he was an ardent admirer of Wesley, and religious services in the Methodist faith were held for a long time in one of his tenant houses. As the members of the congregation increased and a large building became necessary, he interested himself in erecting a new edifice on his own land. This was the first Methodist church in Orange county. His house, as already stated, was the headquarters of General Knox during the encampment. The timber on his farm was mainly cut down for firewood for the army, for which he was awarded compensation.* He left no children.

William (7), who married Mary, daughter of Benjamin Floyd, of Brookhaven, L. I., resided with his father in the homestead at New Windsor village. He succeeded him in his business at New Windsor, but after the Revolution the business declined in favor of the greater advantages possessed by Newburgh, and ultimately ceased. He served as captain in the second regiment of militia of Ulster county (his father being colonel), under commission bearing date Dec. 13th, 1772. His name also appears among the judiciary of the county as judge of common pleas in 1782. He died in 1810, leaving three children, viz:

1. Thomas, who married Harriet Rumsey, of Maryland, daughter of Col. Chas. Rumsey, of the Revolutionary army. He left eight children, viz: 1, Mary Jane, who married Thomas DeLancey; 2, Eliza, who married Dr. Edward Bullus; 3, Henrietta, who married Chas. F. Morton; 4, John, who married Mary A. Ross (died in 1835, leaving two sons, Robert R. and Charles L. Ellison); 5, Caroline, who married Edmund Morton; 6, Emily, who married John L. Morton; 7, Thomas,

*Joshua Sears and Matthew Smith, appraisers, awarded him "for timber and firewood in the years 1777 and '78, to the amount of two thousand cords and in the years '79, '80 and '81, four thousand and fifty cords; also for one hundred large trees for timber for the use of the garrison at West Point, which amounts to two hundred cords of wood."

who married Mary A. Ellison (has three children, Mary A., Thomas W., and Matilda); 8, Charlotte, who married William C. Maitland.

2. Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Floyd, of Long Island. She died without issue.

3. Margaret, who married John Blackburn Miller, of New York, and left three children, viz: 1. Wm. Ellison Miller; 2, Christopher; 3, Mary E.

There was much in the business career of Col. Thomas Ellison, much in his experience in pioneer life, and much in his example that deserve a more complete record. There were few men who enjoyed more unreservedly the confidence of the people of the district. He was their agent, their adviser, their merchant, their banker, and their military commander. Through his family connection with Governor Colden, he was for years influential with the government of the province, and through his personal kindness and aid to the Clintons, secured their aid at a time when perhaps political necessity made it most essential. His conduct during the Revolution comes down to us somewhat obscure. In the early stages of the trouble with England he was with the remonstrants against the measures of the ministry; but with large property interests in New York as well as in Ulster county, he was peculiarly situated—the one he could not retain, after the British troops gained possession of the city, without allegiance to the crown; the other was lost without allegiance to the revolutionary government of New York. Precisely how the difficulty was met is perhaps of little moment; it is sufficient to know that the Ellison estates suffered no losses from the war, except those incident to business, and that the founder of the family lived and died very greatly respected.

The business at New Windsor was continued during the war so far as it could be from the almost total suspension of intercourse with New York. It is said that at the time of the reduction of the forts in the Highlands, when the people of New Windsor, as well as of other exposed settlements, hastily fled to the country, William Ellison, then occupying the homestead (Col. Ellison being in New York), gathered up the plate and jewelry of the family and deposited in the bottom of the smoke house, covered it with earth and ashes, lighted the cob fire and left a number of hams on the poles. When the alarm passed over and he returned the hams were gone, but the treasure was safe. However true the story may be, it is a well attested fact that Col. Thomas Ellison was for many years in the habit of burying his accumulations of coin in his garden. At his death he left a chart of his deposits by which it was all recovered by his heirs except perhaps a single pot.* There is now very little of the Ellison estate in the hands of the family.

THE NICOLL FAMILY.

The ancestor of the Nicoll family of New Windsor was Dr. John Nicoll, of Scotland, who came to New York in 1711. He was an earnest Presbyterian, and appears very soon after his arrival to have been at work in the interest of that denomination, having in 1716, in company with Patrick McKnight, Gilbert Livingston, and Thomas Smith, organized the Wall street Presbyterian church, the first society under the discipline of the church of Scotland in New York city. Samuel Miller, D. D., in his memoir of the Rev. John Rodgers, D. D., a late pastor of this society, says of Dr. Nicoll: "His exertions in behalf of the church in New York were as useful as they were unwearied." In a sermon preached on the occasion of his death, by the Rev. Dr. Pemberton, at that time pastor of the church, which was afterward published, the speaker said: "These walls will be a lasting monument to his (Dr. Nicoll's) zeal for the house and the public worship of God; in the erecting of which he spent a considerable part of his estate, and undertook a hazardous voyage to Europe, for the establishment of security of this infant society. Upon these and other accounts too numerous to be mentioned, while a Presbyterian church subsists in the city of New York, the name of Nicoll will ever be remembered with honor as one of its principal founders and its greatest benefactor."

Dr. Nicoll was an early purchaser of land covered by the Minisink patent; and also of patents in New Windsor and Cornwall, holding at the time of his death 14,500 acres. Of these lands falling more particularly in the field of this volume, may be enumerated the following, viz: On the 7th October, 1734, he purchased from John Waldron, Cornelius Van Horne and James Livingston, one hundred and sixty acres at Plum Point, being the lands granted by patent August 6, 1720, to "Patrick Mac Gregorie, otherwise called Peter MacGregory." From the same parties, two thousand acres previously granted by patent to John Lawrence, excepting one hundred acres for which a deed had been given to John McLean. This purchase was subsequently known as the Bethlehem tract. From the same parties, seven hundred and

*A pot containing some $600 was unearthed by Mr. H. F. Corwin in 1869. There was no evidence in regard to its ownership. It may or may not have been a part of Mr. Ellison's treasure.

sixty-five acres, which had also been patented to John Lawrence, adjoining the Bethlehem tract—excepting one hundred acres previously sold to David Sutherland. From the same parties, six small islands in the mouth of Murderer's creek, containing about seven acres. On the 12th April, 1838, he purchased of Peter Post and Anne, his wife, five hundred acres on the north bank of Murderer's creek and immediately west of Plum Point.* On the Plum Point lands he erected a homestead house, still in good preservation, its site being that or near that of the log house built by Patrick MacGregorie in 1685. This homestead remains in his descendants as well as the principal part of the purchase from Peter Post.

Dr. Nicoll married Mrs. Rebecca Ransford, nee Dowden, of Boston, Mass. He lived in New York city, where he died October 2, 1743, in his sixty-fourth year. He was buried under the communion table in the Wall street church. His children were: (1) John², (2) Margaret².

(1) John Nicoll² was sent to Scotland to be educated and graduated at the University of King James at Edinburgh, where his father received his degree. He married (marriage license Sept. 7, 1736) Frances Little, daughter of Rev. John Little and Frances Fitzgerald, of Stonefield. Their children were: (3) John³, (4) Leonard Dowden³, (5) Isaac³, (6) William³.

(2) Margaret², daughter of Dr. John Nicoll, married, first, Isaac DuBois, and second Rev. Alex. Cumming, of New York. She had one daughter by her first husband, Margaret DuBois.

John (3), Leonard D. (4), and Isaac (5), were all more or less active for the colonies in the war of the Revolution. John (3) occupied the homestead on Plum Point, and was there probably soon after his marriage. He was commissioned second lieutenant in Col. Ellison's regiment of militia, Dec. 15, 1763, by Gov. Colden, and again by Gov. Tryon, Dec. 9, 1772. In May, 1775, he was chosen one of the committee of safety of New Windsor, and identified himself fully with the revolution. On the 20th September of the same year, he was commissioned captain in second Ulster regiment of militia, under Colonel James Clinton, and was on duty in the frequent services in which that regiment had part, and especially in the short but sharp campaign in defence of the Highland forts and the march for the protection of Kingston. He was associated with Captain Machin in the construction of the booms and chains for the obstruction of Hudson's river, and rendered other important public services. He married Hannah Youngs, daughter of Abimael Youngs and Phebe Birdsey, of Walkkill precinct, Jan. 26, 1766, and had: (7) Abimael Youngs⁴, (8) Francis⁴, (9) John Dowden⁴, and (10) Leonard William⁴. He died at the old homestead on Plum Point, Sept. 27, 1783.

Leonard Dowden Nicoll⁴ was also a captain in Colonel James Clinton's regiment of militia, and was in service at Fort Montgomery at the time of its capture. He was also on frontier duty. In 1778-80 he was a member of the committee of safety of New Windsor. He married Ruth Birdsley, Dec. 18, 1768. Their children were: (11) Elizabeth⁴, and (12) John⁴. His father built a house for him on the site now occupied by the house belonging to the estate of his grandson, the late Ethelbert B. Nicoll.* He died there June 12, 1815.

Isaac Nicoll⁵ was commissioned colonel of minute men, Jan. 5, 1776, and immediately following was placed in command of the forts in the Highlands, then being constructed, "until the arrival of a proper continental officer, or until otherwise ordered." He continued in this duty until relieved by Lieutenant-Colonel Livingston in May following, and for "his faithful service and his strict attention to the public interests" was given a vote of thanks by the provincial convention of New York. The minute-men having been disbanded in June, 1776, he was, on the 12th July following, commissioned colonel of militia of Orange county, to go into immediate service under a resolution calling out one-fourth of the militia. In this capacity he was in command at Haverstraw, Aug. 7th; at Moriscaug, Sept. 29th, and at Peekskill, Dec. 12th. On the 24th September, 1777, he was appointed by Gov. Clinton sheriff of Orange county, and served in that office until March 22, 1781. In this capacity he had charge of the execution of Claudius Smith and several of his band of outlaws. In 1783, he moved to New Jersey, where, for a number of years, he was a member of the state legislature. He married Deborah Woodhull, sister of General Nathaniel Woodhull and daughter of Nathaniel Woodhull and Sarah Smith, of Mastic, L. I., May 20, 1763. Their children were: (13) Frances⁴, (14) John⁴, (15) Sarah⁴, (16) Nathaniel W.⁴, (17) Walter D.⁴, (18) William⁴, (19) Sarah⁴, (20) Elizabeth⁴, (21) Margaret⁴, (22) Julia⁴. He resided for some years in New Windsor, and subsequently at Goshen. He died Oct. 9, 1804, at Scrawlingborough, near Hackensack, New Jersey.

William Nicoll (6), choosing a sea-faring life, owned and commanded different merchant vessels. He was not in the country during the Revolution. He married Ann Bicknall, of Plymouth, England, which place he made his home, and died there Sept. 1, 1808, leaving two children, William and Elizabeth.

(7) Abimael Young Nicoll, oldest son of John (3), was commissioned lieutenant in U. S. artillery, March 4, 1791; was promoted to the ranks of captain and major, and on the 13th March, 1813, was made adjutant and inspector-general with the rank of colonel. He resigned his commission June 1, 1814. He married Caroline Agnes Ledbetter, daughter of Col. Drury Ledbetter and Winifred Lanier, of Virginia, in 1792. Their children were: (23) John C.⁵, (24) William H.⁵, (25) James S.⁵, (26) Charles H.⁵, (27) Alexander Y.⁵, (28) Lewis F.⁵, (29) Caroline W.⁵, (30) George A.⁵, (31) Francis E.⁵, (32) Frederick⁵. His descendants are living in Georgia.

(8) Frances Nicoll⁴, daughter of John (3), married William Bernard Gifford, son of Arthur and Mary Gifford, of Flatbush, L. I., June 20, 1792.

(9) John Dowden Nicoll⁴, son of John (3), married (11) Mrs. Elizabeth Woodhull (nee Nicoll), Jan. 28, 1802. Their children were: (33) Eliza Ann⁵, (34) John W.⁵, (35) Leonard D.⁵. He lived in the old homestead, now belonging to the estate of his son, (35) Leonard Dowden Nicoll⁵, until 1843, when he removed to a new house about half a mile north.

(35) Leonard Dowden Nicoll⁵, married Arietta Denton, daughter of Henry Denton and Sarah Bedford, of Goshen, June 26, 1838. Their children were: John Dowden, Sarah, Wm. Leonard, Henry D., Elizabeth, and Francis G. He dropped "Dowden" from his name when (12) John Nicoll⁴ named one of his sons Leonard Dowden. His eldest son, John D., married Helen Irene Lee, daughter of Leonard Lee and Ann Maria Graham, of New Windsor, May 15, 1861. They had no children. His second son, Henry D., married Anna, daughter of Dr. William and Ellen M. Camac, of Philadelphia, Oct. 16, 1877. His youngest son, Francis G., married Alice, daughter of Joseph H. and Cornelia Scranton, of Scranton, Pa., Oct. 13, 1775, and had one child, Leonard.

(10) Leonard William Nicoll⁴, never married.

(11) Elizabeth Nicoll⁴, married Nathaniel Woodhull, son of Col. Jesse Woodhull and Hester DuBois, of Blagg's Clove, Sept. 3, 1787.

There was only one child, who died in infancy. Nathaniel Woodhull^r was born Oct. 1, 1758, and died April 12, 1799.

(12) John Nicoll, married Anna Williams, daughter of Jonas Williams and Abigail Brewster (daughter of Elder Samuel Brewster), of New Windsor, Oct. 29, 1802. Their children were: (36) Helen M.^s, (37) Frances E.^s, (38) Ruth^s, (39) Leonard D.^s, (40) Leonard D.^s, (41) Mary A.^s, (42) John W.^s, (43) Ethelbert B.^s, (44) Jonas W.^s. His father left him his house and land, which now belong to the estate of his son, Ethelbert B. Nicoll.

(37) Frances E. Nicoll^s, married George W. Johnes, son of Dr. Timothy Johnes and Abigail Blanchard, of Morristown, N. J., June 5, 1827.

(38) Ruth Nicoll^s, married John Richard Caldwell, son of Richard Caldwell and Maria Chandler, of Blooming Grove, Sept. 13, 1831. Charles Caldwell, of Newburgh, is her son.

(40) Leonard D. Nicoll^s, married Ann, daughter of Gen'l Gilbert O. Fowler and Rachel Ann Walker, of Newburgh, Oct. 23, 1839. Their children are: Gilbert Ogden Fowler and Edward Leonard.

(41) Mary A. Nicoll^s, married Enoch L. Fancher, son of Samuel M. Fancher and Matilda Lewis, June 11, 1840.

(42) John W. Nicoll^s, married Elizabeth P. Craig, daughter of James J. and Harriet P. Craig, of Craigville, Sept. 28, 1843.

(43) Ethelbert B. Nicoll^s, married Frances F. Randolph, daughter of Hugh F. and Sarah N. Randolph, of Bloomfield, N. J., Oct. 19, 1853. Their children are: Helen M., Anna R., Frances L., Mary G. F., and John William.

(18) William Nicoll^t married Euphemia, daughter of Frederick and Mary Ten Eyck Fine, of New York, June 16, 1796. Their children were: (45) William^s, (46) John^s, and (47) Mary F.^s.

(45) William Nicoll^s, son of William Nicoll (18), married Mary Montfort Brinkerhoff, daughter of John V. D. L. Brinkerhoff and Sarah Montfort, of Fishkill, Sept. 28, 1823. Their children were: William, Mary M., Euphemia F., William J. and George Z. Some of these reside at Middle Hope, Orange County.

(46) John Nicoll^s, son of William Nicoll (18), married, second, Mrs. Elizabeth Howell Denniston, daughter of Judge Nathan White and Fanny Howell, of Blooming Grove, Dec. 21, 1855. Their children by this marriage were: John M., Augustus W., Isaac, Julianna, Charles, Edward, Charles and Elizabeth W., some of whom are living at Washingtonville. There was one child, William, by former marriage.

THE JOHN YOUNG FAMILY.

The John Young family, of Little Britain, sprang (maternally) from the same stock as Colonel Charles Clinton. In "a genealogical and biographical sketch, written by Joseph Young," in 1807, it is said: "James Clinton, Esquire, who lived near Belfast, in the North of Ireland, had a sister named Margaret, and one son, named Charles, and two daughters, viz: Christiana and Mary. James Clinton's sister, Margaret Clinton, was married to my great-grandfather, John Parks, and had a son named John (who was the grandfather of Arthur Parks), and two daughters, Jane and Barbara." About the year 1700, the whole connection removed to the county of Longford, and lived nearly contiguous to each other near Edgeworthstown, where Jane Parks (daughter of Margaret Clinton Parks), was married to my grandfather, John Young, and had a son named John Young, 2d, and a daughter, Mary; and my grand-aunt, Barbara Parks (sister of Jane Parks and daughter of Margaret Clinton Parks), was married to John Crawford, and had three sons, viz: Matthew, Alexander and Joseph, and a daughter named Mary. After my grandfather, John Young, died, his widow, Jane Parks, was married to Thomas Armstrong," who died on the passage to America, in 1729. Jane Parks-Young-Armstrong died at Little Britain, Feb. 5th, 1761, aged 84 years, as inscribed on her monument in the Clinton burial ground at Little Britain. John Young, 2d, son of John Young, 1st, and his wife, Jane Parks, married his cousin, Mary Crawford, and her husband, John Crawford, and daughter of Barbara Parks, sister of Jane Parks, wife of John Young, 1st. A sketch more particularly of the descendants of John Young and his wife, Mary Crawford, is appended.

John Young, 2d, one of the immigrants with Charles Clinton in 1729, was born in Ireland in 1702. His wife was Mary Crawford, granddaughter of Margaret Clinton and John Parks. She was born in Ireland in 1704, and, according to the sketch of the family by her son, Joseph, was living in the vicinity of Albany in 1807, at the age of 103 years. He settled on the Johnston patent, east of the Clinton homestead, his deed dating Aug. 22, 1730, on which day Clinton also received deed. He sold to John Welling, about 1764, and removed to the White Creek district* in what is now Washington county, and from thence to the residence of his son, Joseph, in Albany, soon after the outbreak of the war of the revolution. He died in 1784, aged 82 years. His children were: 1, Thomas; 2, Joseph; 3, John; 4, Isaac; 5, Jane; 6. Mary; 7, Barbara.

Thomas Young (1) was born in Little Britain, Feb. 19, 1831; died at Philadelphia in June, 1777. He was an apt scholar in his youth, and subsequently studied medicine, attaining high rank in his profession. He located at Sharon, Conn., from which he removed to Albany in 1764. While here he was not only active in his profession, but also in the political measures in which the colony embarked in opposition to the stamp act. In the fall of 1766 he removed to Boston, Mass., where his political proclivities soon gave him rank with the most extreme men of the Hancock and Adams school, and rendered himself specially obnoxious to the local officers of the British government from his leadership of the band of "Mohawks," so called, who threw overboard the cargo of tea in Boston Harbor, Dec. 16th, 1778, for which, and other activities against the British government, he was among the number designated for arrest and transportation to England for trial for high treason. To escape arrest he fled to Newport, whence he was followed by the officers of the frigate Rose, and barely escaped seizure by flight in the night. He found refuge in Philadelphia, where he fell into some practice, and when the general army hospital was established there he was appointed its senior physician with the celebrated Dr. Rush, and had its chief care until his death. While at Sharon, Conn., he married Mary, daughter of Captain Winegar, by whom he had two sons and four daughters, viz: Rosmond, John, Susan, Catherine, Sarah, and Mary. Rosmond died young. Susan married Mr. Knies, of Philadelphia, and had two sons, Thomas Y. and John; she died in 1803 or '04, and her sons, Thomas Y. and John, removed to the westward of Albany, where their grandmother resided with them. John, the only son of Thomas (1), who survived him, studied medicine with his father and was mate in the hospital at Philadelphia until his father's death, when he was transferred to the army hospital at Albany, then under charge of his uncle, Joseph. At the close of the war he removed to Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and from thence to Hendersonville, Tenn., where he was killed by a fall from his horse in November, 1805. He married Mary Hammond, of Fayette, Pa., by whom he had four children: Mary, Thomas, William, and Sarah. Catherine, the second daughter of Thomas (1), married Daniel Castle, who removed near Canandaigua Lake, where she died. Sarah, the third daughter, married Mr. Clark, of Sharon or Amenia; and Mary, the fourth daughter, married a Doctor Strong.

Joseph Young (2), the second son of John and Mary Young, was born in Little Britain, Feb. 7, 1733. He also studied medicine, principally with Doctor Alex. Clinton, and after his death, with his brother, Doctor Thomas Young. When his brother removed to Boston in 1765, he remained in Albany in private practice until early in 1776, when he was appointed by order of Gen'l Montgomery to establish and superintend a hospital there for the reception of the sick of the northern army, in which charge he remained, with only temporary interruption, until May 4, 1784, when the establishment was broken up. He then removed to and practiced in New York until the fall of 1797. In 1762 he married Sarah, daughter of Samuel Brown, of Colchester, Conn. She died in Albany in 1768, without issue.

John (3) and Jane (5), children of John and Mary Young, died in childhood.

Mary (6) married Samuel King, and had Mary, who married Doctor Strong; Thomas, who married Cornelia Tracy; John, who married Eliza Godfrey; Samuel, who married Nancy Montagnic; Anna, who married Nicholas King; Sarah, who married Isaac Mills; Mary, who married David Godfrey; and Rhoda, who married Elijah Tucker.

Barbara (7) married Matthew Neely, son of Robert Neely (who married Isabella, sister to Adam Graham), of Montgomery. She died soon after the birth of her only child, Barbara Amelia (born Dec. 19, 1775), who married Thomas Hertell.*

Isaac (4) married Esther Wolcott in the state of Rhode Island. She died after having a son, William, and three daughters, one of whom, Sarah, married Cornelius Tiebout, an eminent copper engraver of Philadelphia. Isaac married, second, Susanna Ross, of Fayette county, Pa., by whom he had seven children: Robert, Nancy, Isaac, Effy, Nelly, Joseph and Jane, who all removed to Kentucky except Isaac, who remained in partnership with his half-brother, William, at or near Uniontown, Pa. Isaac, their father, visited New York in the summer of 1795, where he died of yellow fever and was buried in Potter's Field.

The history of the family, if not of special mention in local records, is eminently so in that of one of its sons, Dr. Thomas Young, the compatriot of Samuel Adams, John Hancock, Dr. Warren, of New England, in resisting the efforts of the British ministry to tax the colonies.

*Christian Hertell was the principal factor in the firm of Christian Hertell and company, of the New Windsor Glass Works, in 1752. Thomas Hertell was Member of the Assembly from New York from 1833 to 1840.

MC CLAUGHRY.

The McClaughry family, of Little Britain, were of the company of immigrants with Charles Clinton in 1729, and at one time among the most numerous and influential in that district. The name has now, however, entirely disappeared there, and descendants can only be imperfectly traced in lateral connections. In his journal of the voyage of the colony which accompanied him, Clinton writes: "Matthew McClaughry, his wife and two of his family, went on shore at Glenarni, May 24th, and quit their voyage." Inferentially a portion of his family remained on board. Subsequently Clinton records in his list of deaths at sea the names of Margaret McClaughry, Joseph McClaughry, and Matthew McClaughry, who were probably children of Mary McClaughry and grandchildren of Matthew. Be this as it may, Mary McClaughry, widow, and her children, accompanied Clinton to Little Britain and made purchase from Andrew Johnston and John Parker, Aug. 2, 1730, of one hundred and twenty acres of the Johnston patent, on which she located with her family, of whom Patrick McClaughry appears on the militia roll in 1738, as the first male representative of the line in local records. Later Colonel James McClaughry was a well-known resident of the district. Jane McClaughry married James McCobb, of Montgomery in 1758, and Sarah McClaughry married Alexander Trimble, of Montgomery in 1754; but the exact relation which they held to each other and to the widowed Mary can not be definitely stated. She was probably the daughter of the widow, Mary, whose husband would, from the same standpoint, seem to have been William. There is a tradition that Colonel James was the son of a brother to the husband of widow McClaughry, and that his father and mother died on the voyage, or soon after; but of this there is no record. The family can only be treated in the relation of branches from Matthew, of Ireland, who "quit their voyage."

"Patrick McClaughry," writes Joseph Burnet, Esq., "married Mary, daughter of John Reid, and sister of the wife of Robert Burnet. He settled on the Johnston patent, near the Little Britain church, on the farm lately owned by Colonel James Denniston, his grandson. He owned the land the Little Britain church stands on, and deeded the same to the congregation in 1765.

He had three or four daughters and two sons. One daughter, Mary, married Col. Geo. Denniston (1762), who lived on and owned his father-in-law's place after the death of the latter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married John Finley (1766), who settled on Hume's patent, on the road leading from Little Britain to the Coldenham church. Her grand-children, Samuel and James B. Finley, now own and occupy the place. Catherine (Katy), another daughter, had quite a romantic history. At the time the continental army was encamped near the square, she was coming into womanhood, sprightly and good-looking. She attended the balls and other social gatherings of the army officers, and among the number that she became acquainted with was Captain Stephen Potter, of one of the Connecticut regiments, who fell desperately in love with her and they were married. After the army disbanded, the captain, if he did not desert his colors, did his young bride, and left her on her father's hands. She had one child by this marriage, a girl named Mary (Polly). Herself and daughter lived together in Montgomery, and, after Capt. Potter's death, she applied for and received a widow's pension. She died near Bloomingburgh, in 1840, over 80 years of age. Patrick McClaghry had another daughter, I believe. She married George Nicholson, of Montgomery, and, after his death, a Mr. Smith, of Bloomingburgh. Of his sons, John married a widow Budd. He lived on part of his father's farm for some years, but ultimately sold out and went to the west, where he died.* His second son, James, died unmarried at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Finley." Patrick McClaghry was a carpenter, and one of the first, if not the first, of that trade in his neighborhood. The old Little Britain church was erected by him. He became one of the first elders of the church, and served in that capacity with honor. He was the oldest son of Mary McClaghry.

James McClaghry, known as Colonel McClaghry, was born in Ireland in 1723, died at Little Britain, August 18, 1790. He married, first, (June 22, 1749), Catherine, daughter of Col. Charles Clinton. She died in Little Britain in 1762, without issue, and he married, second (1763), Agnes, daughter of John Humphrey, who also died without issue, April 11, 1808, in her 65th year. His farm was a part of the Low patent and adjoined the farm of Charles Clinton on the south. He was a man of considerable activity and prominence in the neighborhood.

Under the law of August 22d, 1775, organizing the militia of the Revolution, James McClaghry was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the second Ulster regiment, under command of his brother-in-law,

*John was an ensign in James Stewart's company in DuBoise's N. Y. regiment; commissioned Nov. 21, 1776; taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery, Oct. 6, 1777; promoted lieutenant July 1, 1780. He probably retired from the army before the revolution closed, as his name does not appear in the list of half-pay officers for life.

Colonel James Clinton. The transfer of the latter to the command of the third New York regiment in the expedition against Canada, and subsequently to other positions in the Continental service, left the power of command of the regiment to him, and it was under him that the regiment took part in the defence of Fort Clinton, where he was wounded and taken prisoner. In reference to at least a portion of his service on that occasion, Gov. Clinton wrote in his report of the action: "I immediately sent lieutenant Jackson with a small party to discover the movements of the enemy; but they had not moved more than two miles on the Haverstraw road, when they were attacked by a part of the enemy, who had formed an ambuscade at a place called Doodletown. They immediately retreated, after returning the fire. As soon as the firing was heard, I detached Lieutenant-Colonel Bruyn with fifty continental troops, and as many militia under Lieutenant-Colonel McClaughry, to sustain Lieutenant Jackson, the garrison being at that time so weak that we could not afford them greater aid on that road. The detachment under Colonel Bruyn and McClaughry were soon engaged, but, being too weak to withstand the enemy's great force, retreated to Fort Clinton, disputing the ground, inch by inch. Their gallant opposition, and the roughness of the ground, checked the progress of the enemy for sometime." The manner in which McClaughry was taken prisoner in the action is related by Dr. Young, in his "Recollections," written in 1807: "When the enemy rushed into the redoubts, Col. McClaughry and a Mr. James Humphreys, the lock of whose gun had been shot off, turned back to back and defended themselves desperately. They were assailed on all sides and would undoubtedly have been killed, but a British member of Parliament, who witnessed this spirit and bravery, exclaimed that it would be a pity to kill such brave men. They then rushed on and seized them." During his captivity Colonel McClaughry was confined in a hospital in New York, where he was joined by his wife, Agnes, who made that provision for his comfort which his captors denied. Most of the prisoners were soon exchanged or paroled; but McClaughry saw and suffered quite sufficiently to deepen and broaden his hatred for the English. In his last will he manumitted all his negro servants, except two females, who were retained for his wife, and in addition to manumission gave them oxen, farming implements, etc., and from £180 to £200 each.*

*Two of his male slaves bore the names of Thomas McClaughry and William McClaughry. They located themselves in the town of Wallkill, as did also Loudon, one of their companions. Mr. Eager, in his "Orange County," says they settled at a place called Honey Pot but this is denied on equally good authority. The name is still met in several colored families in this district, who are ranked as the "better class—generally thrifty and well-to-do."

Jane McClaughry, probably daughter of widow Mary McClaughry, married James McCobb, of Montgomery, in 1758. She has descendants through her daughter, Mary (Polly), who married George, son of Alexander Trimble and his wife Sarah McClaughry; and through her second husband, Col. John Nicholson, by whom she had one son, who became the heir to the Nicholson farm at Neelytown.

Sarah McClaughry, born April 7, 1735; married Alexander Trimble, April 11, 1754; died June 10, 1773. Their children: 1. Isabel, born Jan. 15, 1753, married Peter Hill; 2. John, born July 25, 1757; 3. George, born Feb. 5, 1760, married Mary McClaughry; 4. William, born April 12, 1763; 5. Jane, born Nov. 25, 1765, died April 25, 1797, married Rev. Andrew King, of Goodwill church, Montgomery, by whom she had several children, two of whom arrived at maturity, viz: James and Andrew. The former became a lawyer and settled in Albany, where he died June 20, 1841, aged 53 years, the latter was a physician and married first, Eliza, daughter of Hamilton Morrison and his wife, Lydia Beemer, of the Town of Montgomery; they had two children, Ruth S., who died at Ocean Grove, N. J., unmarried, eighty-three years of age, and William L., who resided in New York and married Catharine Moffatt—they had two children, Imogene M. and Angela. Dr. King's second wife was Eliza Hornbeck, daughter of Dr. H. W. Hornbeck, of Scotchtown, by whom he had three children, Henry H., Gilbert and Mary E.—all of whom married, had children, and resided in New York. Late in life he removed to Nashville, Tenn. where he died; 6. Alexander, born July 17, 1767; 7. Elizabeth, born May 1, 1770, married Samuel Hunter; 8. Sarah, born April 7, 1773, married Rev. David Comfort.

Elizabeth McClaughry has the following record on monument in Goodwill cemetery: "In memory of Elizabeth, daughter of William and Mary McClaughry, who departed this life May 31st, 1818, aged 79 years." She was probably the daughter of the widow, Mary, whose husband would, from the same standpoint, seem to have been William.

SAMUEL SLY.

One of the most substantial of the early settlers of New Windsor was Samuel Sly, who purchased, 10th of June, 1757, from William Young and Elizabeth, his wife, a portion of the Hume patent. In the deed he is described as a resident of the precinct of the Highlands, which, the reader is aware, included the present town of New Windsor, and it is altogether probable that he lived in the Little Britain neighborhood for some time prior to the purchase. His wife was Letitia, daughter of William Hamilton, one of the Clinton company of immigrants. The farm which he purchased is still, or was recently, in possession of his descendants. His wife, Letitia, died Sept. 16, 1776, in her 56th year and he died Sept. 4, 1786, in his 76th year. Their children were: 1, Samuel; 2, John; 3, William; 4, Elizabeth; 5, Mary; 6, Catharine. The three daughters married three brothers of the surname of Cross. Samuel Sly was one of the committee of safety of the town of New Windsor in 1775.

1. Samuel, married Margaret McMichael, of a Little Britain family in 1738. Their children were: 1, George; 2, Mary (married James Strachan); 3, Letitia (married Robert Cunningham); 4, Nancy; 5, Lilly. He was in service in Malcom's regiment in the war of the Revolution.

2. John, married Margaret Simpson, and lived and died on a portion of the original homestead bequeathed to him by his father. Their children were: 1, Letitia (Mrs. Robert Carlisle); 2, Catharine (Mrs. John Milliken); 3, Janet; 4, John; 5, Hamilton; 6, Robert; 7, William. Robert (6) was a member of the legislature in 1836 and again in 1841. John (4) was in military service in the war of 1812. William E. Sly, a grandson, was in the Civil War.

3. William was in service in Livingston's regiment in the War of the Revolution. He occupied that portion of the homestead bequeathed to him by his father, and it is still held by his descendants.* He was born February 14, 1760; died November 17, 1834. He married Ann Gouldsberry Barber, daughter of Arthur Barber. She was born December 23d, 1758; died August 11th, 1825. Their children were: 1. Charles Hamilton; 2. Arthur Barber; 3. Maria Gouldsberry.

1. Charles Hamilton, born May 14, 1792; died August 7, 1875, in his 84th year. Married, first, Susan Haines, daughter of Samuel Haines, of Montgomery, by whom he had one daughter, Susan H., married Franklin Mulliner. His second wife (Oct. 4, 1825) was Sarah Johnston, sister of the Rev. John Johnston of Newburgh. Their children, aside from two sons who died young, were: Jane Ann and Catharine Johnston (Mrs. Charles Woodruff).

2. Arthur Barber married Catharine Johnston, sister of Rev. John

*See Recollections by Hon. Edward MacGraw.

Rev. John Johnston was the son of John Johnston and Jane Moncriff, his wife, who emigrated from Ireland, in 1774, and settled in the present town of Crawford, Orange County. He was for forty-seven years pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Newburgh, where he died, Aug. 23d, 1855.

Johnston. One daughter, Sarah Elizabeth, survived them. He died September 3d, 1841.

3. Maria Gouldsberry married Joseph Dill. Their children were: 1. William S.; 2. Henry; 3. David; 4. Ann Eliza; 5. Maria.

Charles Hamilton Sly was a second lieutenant under Capt Alexander C. Burnet in the War of 1812, and a captain in the 14th regiment, 34th brigade of the militia in 1823, afterwards ranking as major. For fifty-one years he was one of the trustees of Goodwill Church, although never a professor of religion.

JOHN WELLING.

John Welling came from Long Island prior to the Revolution. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Mullinder, by whom he had eight children—Peter, William, John, Frederick, Isabella, Anna, Sarah and Mary. Isabella married Alexander Beattie; Mary married Matthew DuBois, Jr.; Anna died young; Sarah married Isaac DuBois.* His farm, or part of it, is now owned by his grandsons, Peter and George Welling. It was originally purchased from the patentees by John Young.

FALLS FAMILY.

Alexander Falls, the progenitor of the Falls family of New Windsor, was a native of Ireland, from where he emigrated, it is said, with the Clinton company in 1729. However this may be, his name appears on the military roll of Capt. Ellison's New Windsor company in 1738, about which time he is said to have settled on the Hume patent. His farm was afterwards owned by John Findley and his heirs. He died in 1755. He had children: 1, Alexander, Jr.; 2, Samuel; 3, Edward; 4, George; 5, Elizabeth, who married ——— Buchanan; 6, Mary.

*Isaac, David, James and Matthew Dubois, were the sons of Matthew Dubois who was of the fourth generation of the first Louis Dubois, one of the Huguenot settlers of New Paltz. Matthew, Jr., was engaged in commercial business in the village of New Windsor; was a petitioner for a ferry franchise there in 1762 and during the Revolution was an assistant commissary. He lived neighbor to Robert Burnet, in Little Britain, but subsequently removed to Newburgh, where he engaged in the manufacture of tobacco and where he died in 1799, in his 75th year. (Hist. of Newburgh) His wife, Mary Welling, died Sept. 21, 1760. His daughter, Mary W., in 1829, Ann M., died Sept. 17, 1828; and his son, David M., died in 1855 aged 77 years. David and James (brothers of Matthew, Jr.) were engaged in the war of Revolution, the former as lieutenant in Col. James Clinton's regiment in the expedition against Canada in 1775, from which he returned with impaired health and died soon after, and the latter under Gen'l McDougal in the battle of Monmouth. (Eager's Orange Co.)

1. Alexander, Jr., married Easter ———. He died about October, 1773, without children—at least none are named in his will on file in Albany, dated July 27, 1773—probated October 16, 1773.

2. Samuel, married Mary Denton. They had Elizabeth, Alexander and Samuel. He was wounded and taken prisoner in service in the militia at Fort Montgomery, October 6, 1777, as was also a brother whose name has not been ascertained. He died of wounds while in prison in the old Sugar House, New York, January 30, 1778. He was a member of Col. James McCaughrey's regiment.

3. Edward, born 1745, died January 21, 1776, from injuries accidentally received in his saw mill. (See Eager's Orange Co., correcting the name "Alex." to "Edward"). He was the 2d Lieutenant in Col. McCaughrey's New Windsor regiment, commissioned in 1775. He married Catharine, daughter of Alexander Denniston (1). They had sons Alexander and George, and daughters Esther and Frances, as named in his will, January 16, 1776, of whom 1. Alexander was a merchant in Newburgh, and the father, (by his first wife), of William H., George, Edward, Hiram and Alexander Falls, all of whom were engaged in mercantile pursuits in Newburgh. William H. was a member of the firm of Reeve & Falls; subsequently removed to New York, where he was for many years president of the Tradesmen's Bank. George and Edward died unmarried. Hiram married Deborah, daughter of Capt. Charles Birdsall. He served as an apprentice to his uncle, Hiram Wood, as a wagonmaker; was subsequently in the crockery trade, and, a few years prior to his death, was associated with Charles Johnston in the forwarding business. He left no children. Alexander married Sarah, daughter of John Leyard. After conducting mercantile business in Newburgh, he removed to Columbia, S. C., where he died without issue. William H. left two sons and two daughters. Alexander, his father, was thrice married. His third wife, Fanny Belknap, died at Philadelphia, Pa., December 1st, 1877, aged 92 years and 6 months. She was buried at Goodwill Church in Montgomery. As appears by his will Edward Falls, his grandfather, was an "innholder" at the time of his death in the house now known as the "Headquarters of General George Clinton," after the fall of the forts in the Highlands, October, 1777. His widow married Samuel Wood and continued the inn, which became known as the "Wood's House." Later the house became the home of Samuel Brewster Moores, a descendant of Deacon Samuel Brewster of New Windsor.

4. George, married (1760) Rachel, youngest daughter of Peter Mulliner, an early settler on the Hume or Hermitage patent. They lived on the Square, on a farm lately owned by Samuel Moore. He died sometime about 1770, leaving, it is said, two children, William and Isabella, of whom William only is mentioned in the will of his brother Alexander, Jr. His widow, Rachel Mulliner, married James Denniston, October, 1773. His son William, married Elsie Davis, by whom he had five children: 1. George; 2. Rachel, married James Roberts; 3. Isabella, married David Scott and had descendant in Little Britain; 4. Jane, married Obadiah Beatty; 5. James, removed to the South when a young man, and died there.

5. Elizabeth, married Robert Buchanan and had Alexander, James, Arthur, George, Jane, Isabella and Elizabeth, as named in the will of her brother, Alexander Falls, Jr.

6. Mary, married Hiram Wood.

The facts stated are from a memorandum of the late Wm. E. Warren of Newburgh, brother-in-law of Hiram Falls, and from wills of Alexander, Jr. and Edward Falls on file at Albany.

THE CLINTON FAMILY.

The Clintons, of New Windsor, occupy so conspicuous a position in the annals of the State of New York, and in standard historical and biographical literature, that an extended notice, in a work of the character of this volume, would be superogatory. Nevertheless it is due to a town whose history is so intimately associated with that of the family that more than a passing reference should be made to them.

It will be generally understood that two branches of the Clintons are represented in the history of the state, and that their relationship was very remote. The first was that of the colonial governor, George Clinton, the youngest son of Francis, sixth Earl of Lincoln, who was governor of the province from 1743 to 1753, when he returned to England. He was the father of Sir Henry Clinton, who was in command of the English army in America during a part of the Revolution. The second and more honored branch of the family in this country, were the descendants of William Clinton, grandson of Henry Clinton 2d, Earl of Lincoln, an adherent to the fortunes of royalty in the civil wars of England, and an officer in the army of Charles I. On the fall of the King whose cause he had espoused and whom he had served with marked devotion,* he fled to the continent to escape the fury of Cromwell's army,

*His coat of arms and its motto, "Loyaulte n'ahonte," illustrates his devotion and his position. His bearings are thus described: Argent-six crosses crosslet fitchee, sa. three, three, two, one; on a chief az. two mullets or pierced gules, Crest—out of a ducal coronet gu. a plume of five ostrich feathers ar. banded with and remained for several years in France and Spain. On his return he settled in Scotland, where he married a lady of the family of Kennedy. He was soon compelled to seek personal safety in Ireland, where he died leaving an orphan son, James, then about two years of age, and a daughter, Margaret.* On attaining his majority, James visited England for the purpose of recovering the estates of his father but, being barred by the limitation of an act of Parliament, returned to Ireland, after marrying Elizabeth Smith, daughter of a captain Wm. Smith of Cromwell's army. He afterwards became an officer in the English army, and was granted, for his military services, a valuable estate in the county of Longford. He died January 14, 1717, and his wife December 5, 1728, leaving a son, Charles and two daughters, Christian and Mary. Charles married Elizabeth Denniston, and soon after united with the "dissenters" and opposed the ruling party in Ireland. It will be remembered that after the Irish Revolution, in 1689, and the accession of the house of Hanover, Ireland was treated as a conquered province. Clinton with others of his faith fell under the law of religious and political proscription, and led him to the determination to remove to America. Having leased his estate for ninety-nine years to Lord Granard, and succeeded in enlisting a company of his friends and neighbors to accompany him, * he sailed from Dublin on the 20th day of May, 1729, with the intention of debarking at Philadelphia. It soon became apparent that a fortunate selection had not been made in the ship, the "George and Anne," or her commander. The vessel was slow and the voyage exceedingly long and tedious, to which was added the breaking out of a fatal type of measles and a failure in the supply of provisions. Some ninety persons, heads of families and children, fell victims to the disease and the absence of proper food, the track of the ship was marked with bodies of the dead. Under the circumstances the passengers were anxious to reach land at any point favorable for debarkation, and the captain was induced for a consideration to change his course with that object in view. On the 4th of October, after a voyage of five months, a line laid chevronways, az. Supporters— two greyhounds ar. each collared and lined gu. Motto—"Loyaulte n' a honte,". Charles Clinton brought this coat of arms with him to New Windsor, and it is retained by the family the present day, changing the motto, however, to the more appropriate: "Patria cara, carior libertas."

*By a receipt preserved among his papers it appears that the charter party was composed of ninety-four persons, heads of families with children and servants. The names of most of these heads of families will be found in Clinton's journal Appendix.

See Biographical Sketch by Joseph Young in Appendix.

land was hailed with joy and in a few hours thereafter the survivors of the company were on shore at Cape Cod on the coast of Massachusetts. The season was then so far advanced that little could be done and a considerable portion, if not all, of the company remained at Cape Cod until the Spring of 1730, when they removed to New York and from thence to Ulster County, and located on and in the vicinity of the Andrew Johnston patent,* in the district known as Little Britain.

Clinton was an acknowledged leader among his neighbors in the wilderness, as he had been in the community from which he had emigrated. He was a good mathematical scholar and surveyor and qualified for any duty which might be required at his hands. He soon became an agent for the sale of patented lands in his vicinity, to which no doubt was due the subsequent settlement in the district of so large a number of immigrants from his old neighborhood. He was appointed Justice of the Peace soon after his arrival and in 1769, a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Ulster County. In 1756 he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Second Regiment of Militia of Ulster County, and in 1758, by Governor Sir Charles Hardy, Lieutenant-Colonel of the battallion under the command of Colonel Bradstreet, in which capacity he took part in the French and Indian war. He was stationed at Fort Herkimer, in the valley of the Mohawk, in 1758, and in the Summer of that year was in the capture of Fort Frontenac.At the close of the war he returned to Little Britain where he spent the remainder of his days in the cultivation of literature and the management of his estate. Dr. Joseph Young writes of him at this period: "Col. Charles Clinton possessed an acute genius, a penetrating solid judgment, an extensive fund of useful as well as ornamental knowledge, with the affability and polished manners of a polite gentleman. He was a tall, straight, graceful person, of a majestic appearance." In his private and in his public relations he sustained a pure and elevated character, and exerted a great influence in the district in which he lived. He was also active in the cause of religion and good morals. Bringing with him

*The purchase of farms was made in the autumn of 1730, sometime having been spent in prospecting.

Clinton has had the credit of naming the settlement, but it is now asserted that that honor belongs to Peter Mullinder, a prior immigrant. The question has been referred to in Chapter IV.

The New York troops, under Col. Bradstreet, consisted of two detachments, one commanded by lieutenant-colonel Clinton, consisting of 440 men, under Captains Ogden of Westchester, DuBois of Ulster, Bladgley of Dutchess, and Wright of Queens. The second was commander by lieutenant-colonel Isaac Corse of Queens, and consisted of 668 men.

from Ireland a certificate of his church connection, he united with the Bethlehem church, of which he was made an elder and held that relation until his death. He was born on his father's estate in county Longford, Ireland, in 1690, and died at his residence in Little Britain, November 19, 1773, in his eighty-third year, in full view of the approach of the Revolution. "He expired," writes Dr. Hosack, "breathing an ardent spirit of patriotism, and in his last moments conjured his sons to stand by the liberties of America." His wife, Elizabeth Denniston, was the daughter of Alexander Denniston, an officer under St. Rutte in 1691. She was well acquainted with the military operations of the times, and shared largely in the patriotic ardor of her husband and sons. Her letters to her husband, during the periods of his official absence, places her in an interesting and commanding light. She was born in 1704, and died at the residence of her son James (the old homestead of her husband) on the 25th December, 1779, in her seventy-fifty year.*

Charles Clinton and Elizabeth Denniston had seven children :

1. Catharine, born in Ireland August 11, 1723; married James McClaughry June 22, 1749; died without issue November 28, 1762, in her fortieth year.
2. James, born in Ireland March 31, 1726; died at sea August 28 1729.
3. Mary, born in Ireland July 11, 1728; died at sea August 2, 1729.
4. Alexander, born in Little Britain April 28, 1732; married Mary Kane, November, 1757; died March 11, 1758, without issue, aged 26.

Alexander Clinton was a graduate of Princeton college in 1750. He studied medicine in New York with Dr. Middleton; located at Shawangunk, and "practiced with great success and reputation. He excelled in everything to which he turned his attention; he was a good classic

This certificate reads: "Whereas the bearer, Mr. Charles Clinton, and his wife, Elizabeth, lived within the bounds of this Protestant dissenting congregation from their infancy, and now design for America; this is to certify, that all along they have behaved themselves soberly and inoffensively, and are fit to be received into any Christian congregation that Providence may cast their lot. Also, that said Charles Clinton was a member of our Session, and discharged the office of ruling elder very acceptably, this, with advice of Session, given at Corbay, in the county of Longford, Ireland.

*Charles Clinton and his wife, Elizabeth, his daughter, Catharine (Mrs. McClaughry), his sons, Charles and Gen. James, with the wives and children of the latter, were buried in the family burial ground at Little Britain. The plot was enclosed with a substantial wall and monuments erected; but the removal of the relatives from the vicinity left the place to the care of strangers. The wall and gate becoming broken, and rank weeds and bushes springing up, induced John A. C. Gray, grandson of Mrs. Mary Gray Clinton, to remove the remains and monuments to Woodlawn Cemetery in 1875. They now occupy a fine plot, with a sub-scholar, a great physician, a considerable poet, an excellent musician and understood the use of the broadsword in a superior degree. He was as estimable in character as in acquirements and was beloved and respected by all who knew him. He died of confluent smallpox and was buried in the cemetery at Bruynswick (Shawangunk).

5. Charles, born in Little Britain July 20, 1734; died at his residence in Montgomery, April 3, 1791, in his fifty-seventh year, without issue.

Charles Clinton also studied medicine under Doctor Middleton, and, was much esteemed for his skill in surgery by the celebrated Dr. Houck. He was a surgeon in the British army at the capture of Havana. He ultimately settled in the precinct of Hanover (Montgomery) where he practiced with success. He died of consumption, unmarried.

6. James, born at Little Britain, August 9, 1736; died December 22, 1812, in his seventy-seventh year.

James Clinton received an excellent education, and acquired much proficiency in the exact sciences, but his ruling inclination was for military life. He was appointed a lieutenant in the second regiment of militia of Ulster County in 1756, and was subsequently captain of a company in the battalion of which his father was lieutenant-colonel, and particularly distinguished himself in the war between the English and the French, at the capture of Fort Frontenac, by taking a sloop of war on Lake Ontario, which had obstructed the advance of the English forces. In the militia regiment, of which he was lieutenant, he rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in 1772, but in the interim was appointed captain-commandant of four regiments levied for the protection of the western frontiers of Orange and Ulster, a post of great responsibility and danger, as it devolved upon him the protection of a line of settlements of at least fifty miles in extent, which were continually threatened by the Indians. At the outbreak of the revolution he was appointed by the Provincial Convention of New York (1775) colonel of the militia of southstantial granite monument around which the old monuments are suitably grouped. As a question may at some time arise as to the title of the Little Britain plot, the following extract from Charles Clinton's will is here quoted: "It is my will that I be buried in the graveyard on my own farm, beside my daughter, Catharine; and it is my will the said graveyard be made four rods square, and an open road to it at all times, when it shall be necessary; and I nominate and appoint my said three sons, Charles, James and George, to see the same executed accordingly; and I order that my said Executors procure a suitable stone to lay over my grave, whereon I would have the time of my death, my age and coat of arms cut. I hope they will indulge me in this last piece of vanity." The remains of some of his neighbors were also buried in the plot, among others, Mrs. Jane Armstrong, daughter of his aunt Margaret. Her remains were not removed, and strange to say, the remains of Mary DeWitt, the first wife of General James Clinton, and mother of DeWitt Clinton, were left in the old burial ground.

ern Ulster, embracing part of the regiment theretofore commanded by Colonel Thomas Ellison, and in the same year was appointed colonel of the third continental regiment of New York, marched with Montgomery to Quebec and took part in the heroic campaign in Canada. August 9th, 1776, he was promoted brigadier-general, and was placed in command of the construction of the forts in the Highlands. In October, 1777, he commanded under his brother, Governor Clinton, at forts Clinton and Montgomery, in the defense against Sir Henry Clinton, who with three thousand men carried the forts by storm, they being defended by only about five hundred men. Himself and his brother narrowly escaped capture, the latter by springing into a boat and rowing away in the darkness, and the former by sliding down the steep bank of Poplopen's Kill and passing up the bed of that stream. Although wounded he made his way to his home in Little Britain and commenced the reorganization of the militia for the defense of Kingston. In 1779, with sixteen hundred men, he joined General Sullivan in the expedition against the Six Nations. Proceeding up the Mohawk in bateaux, about fifty miles above Schenectady, he conveyed his boats by land to the head of Otsego Lake, one of the sources of the Susquehanna, down which stream he was to proceed. As the water in the outlet was too low to float boats, he constructed a dam across it and thus accumulated water in the lake. By letting out this water and suddenly flushing the stream, his boats and troops were rapidly conveyed to Tioga, where he joined Sullivan, who had ascended the Susquehanna. After one engagement the Indians fled—were pursued and fifty-four of their towns burned. In 1780 he was placed in command of the northern department, with his headquarters at Albany, and was next in the field at Yorktown. In 1782, some promotions were made in which junior officers were given the precedence, and he solicited and obtained leave to withdraw from active duty until such time as there should be pressing need of his services.* He made his last appearance in arms on the evacuation of the city of New York by the British, when he bade farewell to Washington, whose respect he enjoyed. He subsequently discharged several civic trusts; was one of the commissioners to adjust the boundary line between Pennsylvania and New York; a member of the legislature and of the convention which

*His letter of application bears date April 10, 1782, and is characteristic of the man. "At an early period of the war," he writes, "I entered the service of my country, and I have continued in it during all the vicissitudes of fortune, and am conscious that I have exerted my best endeavor to serve it with fidelity. I have never sought emolument, or promotion, and as the different commands I have held were unsolicited, I might have reasonably expected, if my services were no longer wanted, to have been indulged at least with a decent dismissal."

adopted the constitution of the United States, and a State Senator. All these offices he filled with credit to himself and usefulness to his country. In private life he was mild and affectionate, although reserved, in manner—a trait peculiar to his father and also to his son, DeWitt; in battle he was calm and collected but full of energy and activity. He was an able soldier, an incorruptible patriot and a true hearted man.

By his wife, Mary DeWitt,* "a young lady of extraordinary merit," he had: 1. Alexander; 2. Charles; 3. DeWitt; 4. George; 5. Mary; 6. Elizabeth; 7. Catharine. May 1, 1797, in New York city, he married, second, Mrs. Mary Gray, by whom he had: 8. James, died young; 9. Caroline H.; 10. Emma L.; 11. James G.; 12. Letitia; 13. Anna.

Alexander (1), born at Deerpark in 1765, was drowned while sailing from New York to Bull's Ferry, in a "ferry periagua," March 15, 1787, in his twenty-second year. He was appointed a lieutenant in Colonel Lamb's regiment of artillery, in the War of the Revolution, when but fourteen years of age, and became a member of the Society of Cincinnati. After the war he was private secretary to his uncle, Governor George Clinton. He died unmarried.

Charles (2), born at New Windsor, February 18, 1767, was a lawyer in Newburgh; he was also an excellent surveyor, and more of his time was spent in that profession, (which he preferred), than in the law. He was employed in various positions of trust in the village and town of Newburgh—was one of the trustees of the Newburgh Academy and a director of the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, one of the most important local undertakings, and served as a member of the legislature in 1802. He died in New York, April 26, 1829, aged 62 years. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of William Mulliner, of Little Britain, in 1790. Her mother was Mary, daughter of Alexander Denniston, whose sister married the first Charles Clinton. She was born in Little Britain

*Daughter of Egbert and Mary DeWitt, of Deerpark, born Sept: 5, 1737, died Dec. 12, 1795. The marriage was by Rev. John Goetchius, of Shawangunk, Feb. 19, 1765. Their first child, Alexander, was baptized in Shawangunk church.

Mrs. Gray was the daughter of Graham Little, of the town and county of Longford, Ireland, where she was born, Aug. 22, 1768, and died at Newburgh, N. Y., June 23, 1835. She was married on May 19, 1788, to Alexander Gray, and in 1795 came with him to America. They landed at New Castle, July 22d, and proceeded thence to Philadelphia, where Mr. Gray took ill and died. A few days after Mrs. Gray, with her four children, left for New York, the place of their original destination. Having letters in her possession to General Clinton, she came to Little Britain, where she was kindly received. In a short time she returned to New York, and with a view to support herself and children opened a ladies' cap store. After her marriage to him, General Clinton adopted her children and divided his property equally between them and his own children. After the General's death, she removed to Newburgh, where she maintained the reputation of a very excellent woman.

April 27, 1770, died in New York, August 15, 1865, in her ninety-sixth year. They had three children: 1. Maria DeWitt, born in Little Britain, March 26, 1791; married May 1, 1816, Robert Gourlay captain in U. S. army in 1812. 2. Alexander, born in Little Britain, April 7, 1793; died in New York, February 18, 1878, in his eighty-fifth year; married September 22, 1821, Adeline Arden Hamilton, fourth daughter of captain Alexander James Hamilton, of the British army—a Scotch gentleman of the family of Ianerwick—and Mary Deane, youngest daughter of Richard Deane, an Irish gentleman of good birth and standing. Mrs. Clinton was born in Brooklyn Heights, September 5, 1795; died in New York, July 15, 1873. They had seven children: 1, Mary Elizabeth, who married John Rhinelander Bleeker; 2. Adeline Hamilton, who married Thomas Ellis Brown; 3. Alexander James, president of the Eagle Fire Insurance Company of New York;* 4. Anna E., who married Thomas A. Wilmerding; 5. Catharine Spencer, who died young; 6. Charles William, architect; 7. DeWitt, stock-broker, who married Elizabeth Sigourney Burnham. 3. Ann Eliza, born April, 1795, died June 14, 1845, married James Foster, Jr.*

DeWitt (3), third son of Gen. Jas. Clinton, and his wife Mary DeWitt, was born in New Windsor, March 2, 1769; died in Albany, Feb. 11, 1828, in his fifty-ninth year. He married first, Maria Franklin, eldest daughter of Waiter Franklin, a wealthy Quaker of New York city, and Maria Bowne, daughter of Daniel Bowne of Flushing. Mrs. Clinton was a "lady of great beauty, and was highly accomplished." She was born in 1775 and died in 1818; married Feb. 10, 1796. Ten children were the issue of this marriage, viz: 1. Franklin, who died young; 2. Charles Alexander, died November 23, 1861, married Catharine Hone, daughter of John Hone and niece of Philip Hone. She died October 5, 1841. Six children—DeWitt, Catharine S., George William, Augusta, Maria E., Maria F.—all of whom died young except Catharine S., who married Joseph M. Carville, and died May 15, 1870, and Augusta, who married Thomas L. Winthrop, and died October 25, 1859. 3. Walter, died young. 4. Julia died young. 5. James Henry, born in 1802, died in 1824, unmarried. 6. DeWitt, died young. 7. George William, a lawyer of Buffalo, N. Y., born April 13, 1807, married Laura Catharine Spencer, daughter of Hon. John C. Spencer, May, 1832, by whom he had seven children, viz.: DeWitt, a lawyer of Buffalo,—judge advocate with the right of major in the Civil War—married Eleanor Sappington died 1873, bearing no issue; Elizabeth Spencer, who married Henry L. Clinton; Charles A., married Mrs. Mary Lightner Southard; Spencer, lawyer; married Sarah Riley; Catharine Norton, who married Albert J. Wheeler; Mary Norton, who married Abraham H. Baldwin; George, lawyer, who married Alice Thornton; 8. Mary, daughter of DeWitt, married David S. Jones; 9. Franklin, died unmarried; 10. Julia, born August 20, 1815, died unmarried November 21, 1839. Me married, second, Catharine Jones, a "lady of accomplished manners and superior talents and acquirements." She was the daughter of Doctor Thomas Jones, an eminent physician of New York; her mother was the second daughter of Philip Livingston. She died without issue, July 2d, 1855, at the residence of her step-daughter, Mary Clinton Jones, widow of David S. Jones, at Poughkeepsie.

*Dr. Alexander Clinton was educated at Columbia college and was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1819. He practiced for some years in his native county and returned to this city in 1831, where he continued in the exercise of his profession until advanced age obliged him to abandon it. He was a successful practitioner, and notwithstanding the great degree of sensibility and diffidence that characterized him, his skill and talents were well known and justly held in high esteem by his brother physicians, some of the most noted of whom were among his most intimate friends. He was an officer in the United States army during the war of 1812 and with one exception the oldest member of the Society of the Cincinnati at the time of his death. A true gentleman of the old school, he was unostentatious and courteous to every one, inferiors as well as equals.—N. Y. Herald.

DeWitt Clinton was one of the most remarkable men of his time. He was born in New Windsor village* in 1769; received his primary education in the school conducted by Rev. John Moffat in the Little Britain neighborhood; attended the Kingston Academy in 1782; graduated at Columbia College in 1786 and entered the law office of Samuel Jones,

*The question of his birthplace will perhaps never be authoritatively determined. Although a matter of little importance, it has elicited considerable discussion. A local tradition has received credence to considerable extent that he was born in Deerpark, at the residence of Jacob Ruken DeWitt, Mrs. Clinton's brother. This tradition is countenanced by Mr. Eager in his "Orange County," (p. 630). The story is that Mrs. Clinton went on a visit to her brother, in February, 1769, and while there was prevented by a heavy snow storm from returning until after the birth of her child. The probability of the story is marred by its preciseness. That Mrs. Clinton left New Windsor in February and traversed the rough mountain roads for forty-five miles in her condition, would have been an indiscretion to say the least. Rev. Charles Scott attempted to correct the statement by saying that Mrs. Clinton went from Wawarsing to the residence of her brother in March, not thinking, perhaps, that in so writing he makes her take her trip about twenty-four hours before confinement. The tradition in its most reasonable form comes through the Burnet's, of New Windsor, one of whom, (Robert 2), married Mrs. Clinton's niece, who says Mrs. Clinton went to Deerpark in the early part of the winter, that a heavy snow storm came on soon after and so blocked the roads that she did not deem it prudent to return.

James Renwick, L. L. D., Professor of Columbia College, says in his biography: "DeWitt Clinton was born March 2, 1769, at Little Britain, the residence of his father, Genl. James Clinton." Assuming that this statement was made after special inquiry on that point, either at the time of DeWitt's entrance at col-of New York, then of high rank in his profession. In 1789, he was admitted to the bar, but accepting the appointment of secretary to his uncle, Governor George, he gave up law for politics and from that time until his death was identified with the political history of the state. He was member of the assembly in 1798; elected United States Senator in 1802, but resigned the place to accept the office of Mayor of New York, serving in the latter capacity in 1803, 1808-9 and 1811-15; was a member of the State Senate from 1799 to 1802, and 1806 to 1811; Canal Commissioner 1816 to 1822; Governor 1817, and in 1820, '24 and '26, being elected in the first instance by 43,310 votes out of a total cast of 44,989. He died of hydro-throax, or dropsy of the chest, while sitting in his study, on the evening of February 11, 1828. "In person he was," says Hammond in his Political History of New York, "the most perfect specimens of humanity, combining dignity with elegance and symmetry of features ever produced in the state of New York." As governor, he was the reputed author, and at any rate assumed the responsibility of recommending a larger number of great and important measures, which became laws, than all the governors who had preceded him. Perhaps no man who had yet lived in the state had equal natural abilities combined with equal advantages for becoming what he was. He was the pupil of his uncle in politics and in the requirements of the state, and those as all familiar with the expressed convictions of the former, cannot fail to see their reflection in the latter. He carried out his uncle's views in regard to internal improvements and other measures of state policy, through evil and through good report, with a steadiness of purpose that no obstacle could divert, and lived to see the former a successful completion. "Among the masses of his fellow citizens," says Hammond, lege or subsequently, it cannot fail to be received as authority, but presuming that it was based on "the residence of his father," at the time he entered college, it is of no special value. It is not, however, unsupported by local tradition.

Barber, in giving the place of birth as New Windsor village, is sustained by testimony, of no little force, but of which he was perhaps ignorant. That testimony is, that Charles Clinton, the grandfather of DeWitt, was surveyor and agent for the sale of lots in the village of New Windsor; that he acquired there a lot on which he erected a house, barn, etc.; that he transferred his agency to his son, James, about 1762, and soon after. (Sept. 17, 1763—Ulster Records G. G., 110), sold and transferred to him the property referred to, and that there the latter opened an office, and after his marriage, (probably in the fall of 1765), took and continued his residence there, remaining until after the death of his father in 1773, when he removed to the old homestead. Letters are extant written by Col. Clinton, dated "Little Britain," addressed to Capt. James Clinton, "at New Windsor," which are additional evidence of the latter's residence there. The removal to Little Britain during his infancy would explain the tradition that DeWitt was born there, while the fact that his brother, Alexander, was born in Deerpark and baptized in the church at Shawangunk, explains the probable origin of the story that DeWitt was born there.

"he was personally unpopular, from a certain coldness and hauteur of manner." This peculiarity was a family inheritance. Nor was he remarkable for his conversational powers: on literary subjects and other grave topics, he was interesting though not eloquent; his attempts at wit, among those with whom he associated were generally puerile and sometimes offensive. As a political writer, he was capable of keen and biting sarcasm, perhaps more so than any other writer of the age." An index of his mind is perhaps to be found in the decisions which he rendered while member of the State Senate, by virtue of which position he was also, ex officio, a member of the highest court of the state. "Some of these," says Chancellor Kent, "are models of judicial and parliamentary eloquence, and they all relate to important questions, affecting constitutional rights and personal liberty. They partake more of the character of a statesman's discussions than that of a dry technical lawyer." The general summary of his character will be anticipated from what has been written: As a statesman he was preeminent; as a politician, he was defective in natural tact and address. He was able, honest and patriotic in his conduct as a public servant and a man of indomitable personal and moral courage. He died poor, and in view of the circumstances the legislature voted an annuity of $10,000 for the support and education of his children.

George (4), son of General James Clinton, was born June 6, 1771 and died in New York city, September 16, 1809, in his thirty-ninth year. He was an "intelligent and accomplished gentleman, and at different times represented the city of New York in the State Legislature and in Congress." He married Hannah Franklin, sister of the wife of his brother, DeWitt. She was born in 1785 and died May 12, 1855. They had three children: 1. Mary Caroline, born May 9, 1802, died January 18, 1870, was the wife of Henry Overing; 2. Franklin, died young; 3. Julia Matilda, married first, George Clinton Tallmadge, 1826, and second, James Foster, Jr. She died November 1st, 1880.

Mary (5), eldest daughter of General Clinton, born July 20, 1773, died at Albany, September 4, 1808. She married first (1795) Robert Burrage Norton, and second (1807) Judge Ambrose Spencer.

Elizabeth (6) was born January 12, 1776 and died at Binghamton August 27, 1832, in her fifty-seventh year. She married William Stuart in 1803.

Catharine (7), born September 24, 1778, died at Albany, August 20, 1837. She married first (1805) Samuel J. L. Norton, and second (1809) Judge Ambrose Spencer.

James (8), General Clinton's first child by Mrs. Gray his second wife, died young.

Caroline H. (9), born March 27, 1800, married Judge Charles H. Dewey 1824, died May 21, 1864.

Emma (10), born February, 1802, died unmarried, 1823.

James Graham (11), born January 2, 1804, died in New York, May 28, 1849. He was admitted to the bar in 1826; was for some years a master in chancery, and represented the district in Congress from 1841 to 1845. He was married December 27, 1826 to Margaret Ellsworth Conger, daughter of Joshua Conger, of Montgomery; she died December 29, 1863. They had one son, DeWitt. He was captain in the army, during the war with Mexico, and died unmarried at battle of Rivas, April 7, 1856.

Letitia (12), born April 17, 1806, married Dr. Francis Bolton, January 26, 1830, and died April 23, 1842, leaving one son surviving, James Clinton Bolton, now dead.

Anna (13), born July 26, 1809, married Lieutenant Edward Ross of U. S. army, November 9, 1830, died December 11, 1833.

George (7), youngest son of Charles and Elizabeth Clinton, was born at Little Britain, Sunday, July 26, 1739, and died in Washington city (where he was buried) April 20, 1812, in his seventy-third year.

George Clinton was to the state of New York what Washington was to the nation. In early life he gave promise of great activity and courage; he left his father's house and sailed in a privateer in the French war, and on his return demanded and received a place in the expedition under his father and his brother against Fort Frontenac. At the close of the war he settled down to the study of law under Judge William Smith. In 1759 he was appointed Clerk of Ulster County, but held that position for only about one year. He took an active part in colonial politics and was elected to a seat in the Assembly in 1760, serving until the closing session of that body under the English government. In the discussions of that period no voice raised in the province was more consistent and firm in resisting the demands of the ministry, nor was there

*New York was represented in the continental congress by twelve delegates, and three or four of whom were authorized to cast the vote of the State. The vote on the Declaration being taken by states, and the delegates from New York being under instructions, none of them voted for the measure. Clinton and several of his associates hurried home to secure the repeal of their instructions, and having effected that object, the signature of the state was attached to the instrument by the representatives there present, William Floyds, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis and Lewis Morris. Whatever may have been their personal opinions, their signatures were not judicially a personal act. Their names stand as the synonym of the state which they represented.

of his contemporaries one whose energy and zeal was more devoted. In 1775 he was elected to the Continental Congress and served in that body until after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, that instrument, however, failing to receive, under instructions from the provincial convention of New York, either his vote or his signature.* He was appointed a brigadier-general in the army of the United States in 1776 and during the earlier years of the war was active in military affairs in New York, where he held, by virtue of appointment, commission as brigadier-general of militia, subsequently by virtue of his office as governor, he was commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the state. In the former capacity he was in the field with his brigade for the defense of New York city in 1776; and in the latter, held command of the forts in the Highlands at the time of their reduction by Sir Henry Clinton, October 7, 1777, and marched to the defense of the Mohawk Valley in 1779. In April, 1777, he was elected Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, under the first constitution of the state, and was continued in the former office eighteen years. His duties were peculiarly trying. The state was the battle-ground of the nation during almost the entire war of the Revolution; invasions of the enemy swept in on the north and on the south, while the western frontiers were ravaged by savages and Tories; yet through the darkest clouds of the heroic struggle he held the helm with a firm hand and an inspiring courage. His duties after peace was established were not less trying though of a different type; poverty and distress were in his borders, and crude laws required shaping to the changed political relations of the people. In this respect New York differed from the eastern provinces. There, the rebellion carried with it the provincial government, in New York a government had to be formed, and that it was wisely formed and still more wisely administered no one will question. He was president of the convention assembled at Poughkeepsie to consider the federal constitution in 1788;* was again chosen

To understand fully the politics of that period one must read Hammond's "Political History of New York," "History of the Constitution," etc. New York had a policy of its own growing out of its geographical position which it was loath to relinquish. The legislature had voted to send delegates to the constitutional convention to amend the articles of confederation, not to frame a new instrument, and, had not approved that instrument in the convention. The new instrument was believed to be defective in its judicial provisions, and in other respects, and above all it contained no bill of rights guaranteeing personal liberty, freedom of religion, etc. Massachusetts and Virginia opposed its adoption, and only consented to it under an implied agreement that amendments should be made. Those amendments were made and may be found in all publications of the constitution. Without them, very few men would be found to-day who would vote for the constitution. He is a very ignorant man who denounces Clinton for his opposition.

Governor of New York in 1801, and in 1804 was elected Vice-President of the United States, which position he held, by re-election in 1808, at the time of his death. It was by his casting vote that the bill for renewing the first charter of the bank of the United States was defeated, his opposition being placed on the ground that at best the power of Congress was doubtful, and that it should ever be considered the safest rule that Congress should not exercise doubtful powers. In whatever position he was placed, either in public or in private life, whatever he esteemed to be his duty was executed fearlessly and promptly. When in the city of New York, at the close of the war, he saw an English officer in the hands of the mob, to be tarred and feathered, he rushed single-handed to his rescue and saved him from the ignominy, and when again what was known as the Doctors' Mob was raging, he called out the militia and quelled the disturbance. In the most trying periods of the Revolution he did waver in the protection of friends. His old legal instructor was a "King's Man," or Tory. He gave him liberty under restraint, but, he added, "Don't write to me again while the war lasts. Col. Colden and Vincent Matthews of his own neighborhood, met similar treatment, and Silas Gardner was pardoned by him under the gallows. These incidents simply show his character. As early as 1783, he considered and discussed the construction of canals for the internal commerce of the state, and it was from these discussions that his nephew, DeWitt Clinton, became the executive in measures which won for the state the title of Empire; indeed the latter only extended and sounded the administration of his uncle, with the added brilliancy of his own great intellect. In private life he was frank, amiable and warm in his friendships. He married Cornelia Tappen, only daughter of Petrus and Tyante Tappen, of Kingston, Feb. 7, 1770, and immediately thereafter took up his residence in New Windsor, where he remained until October, 1777, when on the fall of the Highland forts his family hastily removed to Little Britain, and from the latter place to Poughkeepsie in December.* His children were: 1. Catharine, born in New Windsor November 5, 1770; married, first John Taylor, of New York city, October 25, 1791. Mr. Taylor died November 26, of the same year, and, June 4, 1801, she married Major-General Pierre Van Cortlandt. She died at Peekskill, Jan. 10, 1811, in her forty-first year. 2. Cornelia Tappen, born in New

*His residence in New Windsor was on the farm late of Thomas W. Christie. It was sold by Clinton to Hugh Walsh, who sold the Christie homestead to Capt. Charles Ludlow, who bequeathed it to his daughter, Mrs. Christie. His removal to Poughkeepsie and subsequently to New York was in consequence of the changes in the location of the state government.

Windsor June 29, 1774; married Citizen Edmund Charles Genet, November 6, 1794, and died March 23, 1810, in her thirty-sixth year. 3. Geroge Washington, born at Poughkeepsie, October 18, 1778; married Anna Floyd, daughter of General William Floyd, September 19, 1808; died March 27, 1813, leaving one son, George William Floyd, born in Poughkeepsie, October 31, 1809, died unmarried in New York May 12, 1842, in his 33d year. 4. Elizabeth, born in Poughkeepsie, July 10, 1780; married Mathias B. Tallmadge, October 25, 1803, died April 8, 1825. 5. Martha Washington, born in Poughkeepsie, October 12, 1783, died February 20, 1795. 6. Maria, born in New York, October 6, 1785, married Dr. Stephen D. Beekman, died April 17, 1829.

In connection with the descendants of Charles Clinton may properly be noticed those of his sisters, Christiana and Mary, and also of his aunt, Margaret.

Christiana Clinton, first married John Beatty, a resident native of County Antrim, Ireland, by whom she had, Charles, Arthur, Mary and Martha, and a son James, who died on the voyage to America in 1729, and on the same voyage, her husband, John Beatty, also died.* Sometime after her settlement in Little Britain, she married James Scott, and removed to New York, where her husband died in March, 1757. She continued her residence in New York until her death, which occurred in March or April, 1776 or 1777, in the 91st year of her age. It is said of her that "she was possessed of a mind, both naturally and by cultivation, of a superior order, and of great moral purity. She was exceedingly dignified in her deportment, and a pattern of propriety in her manners, conversation and dress. The portrait of her represents a lady with quite an agreeable and intelligent countenance."

Her daughter, Mary, married at Little Britain, Robert Gregg, to whom she bore five children. Within the space of six weeks, she was deprived by death of her husband, a daughter, Jane, and three sons, John Charles and James. These most afflictive events produced mental derangement. She lived to a great age, and towards the close of her life her intellect was restored. Her son, James Gregg, was in command of a company of volunteers, under Colonel James Clinton, in the Canada expedition of 1775, and subsequently under Col. Gansevort, at Fort Schuyler. During the investment of that post by St. Leger, in 1777, he was the subject of a most remarkable adventure. Going out from the fort one day with two soldiers to shoot pigeons, all three were shot down and scalped by Indians in ambush. Recovering consciousness, he bade his dog, who had accompanied him, to go for help. As if endowed with intelligence the animal at once obeyed. He ran about a mile and found two men fishing, who were induced by his moans to follow him to his master. The captain was conveyed to the fort, and after suffering much, was restored to health. "He was a most frightful spectacle," says Dr. Macher. "The whole of his scalp was removed; in two places on the forepart of his head the tomahawk had penetrated the skull; there was a wound in his back with the same instrument, besides a wound in his side and another through his arm with a musket ball." (Lossing's Field Book. History Newburgh, 279). He continued in the service until the close of the war, was a half-pay officer, and also a member of the Society of the Cincinnati. He died without issue; as did also his brothers John and Charles. His sister married Stuart Wilson and has descendants.

Martha, the second daughter of Christiana Clinton, was distinguished for great personal beauty. She married a Mr. McMillan, by whom she had one son. Her husband died at an early age, and she took up her residence with her mother, in New York, where she died.

Charles Beatty, Christiana Clinton's eldest son, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, about 1715. He accompanied his mother and her relatives to Little Britain in 1736, where we find his name among the enrolled militia in 1738. August 22, 1744, being then a resident of Neshaming, Penn., he purchased two hundred and fifty acres of the Cornelius Low patent, and sold the same to James McClaghry, July 14, 1749. What his early occupation was is not known. It is said, however, that he started out as a merchant, carrying his goods in a pack on his back. In one of his tours he stopped at the "Log College," in Bucks County, Penn., then under the care of the elder William Lennet, who, becoming interested in him, induced him to enter the ministry. He was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, October 13th, 1742, and on the 26th March, 1743, was called to succeed his patron and instructor, at the Forks of Neshaming, where he was ordained and installed on the 14th of December. After a laborious and useful life in the ministry, he died at Bridgeton, in the island of Barbadoes (whither he had gone to solicit funds for the College of New Jersey), August 13th, 1772, of yellow fever.

He married, June 24th, 1746, Ann, daughter of John Reading, of New Jersey, who bore him eleven children, nine of whom reached mature life, viz: Mary, Christiana, John, Elizabeth, Martha, Charles Clinton, Reading, Erkuries, George, William Pitt and Ann. Erkuries was an officer in the army of the Revolution, and the father of Rev. Charles Clinton Beatty, D. D., L. L. D., of Steubenville, Ohio.

The complete list of Christiana Clinton's descendants exhibits one of the most remarkable families in American history. What the descendants of her brother were in the politics of the nation, hers were in the religious field, in which she still has several distinguished representatives.

Mary Clinton, the second sister of Charles, married a Mr. Condry and had a daughter, Ann, who was the mother of Hon. John Taylor, of Albany. The latter died without issue.

Margaret Clinton, aunt of Charles, married John Parks, and was the maternal ancestor of John Young, one of the Clinton immigrants of 1729, and also of Arthur Parks, who settled at Montgomery some years later. The Crawfords of Albany, and the Bostwicks of Troy, are also of her lineage.

CHAPTER IX.

BIOGRAPHICAL AND GENEALOGICAL SKETCHES.

In a previous chapter of this work has been given, in connection with the settlement of patents, the names of the pioneer families of New Windsor.* In regard to Patrick MacGregorie and his associates no further information has been obtained than is stated in that connection. They were unquestionably the first European immigrants in the present county. Following the MacGregorie colony, and, very nearly in chronological order, were the families of William Chambers, William Sutherland, Peter Matthews, John Alsop, Joseph Sackett, Thomas Ellison, John Nicoll, Peter Mullinder, John Humphrey, John Reid and Robert Burnet, who were followed by Charles Clinton, Alexander Denniston, John Young and others, known as the Clinton immigrants, in 1730, after which time settlements were more rapid and at dates which cannot now be ascertained with certainty, but are in many cases approximated by the military roll of 1738.

WILLIAM CHAMBERS.

William Chambers, one of the holders of the Chambers and Sutherland patent, was a resident thereon prior to its date of issue. He died in 1738 leaving sons William and John. William entered the English Navy and rose to the rank of Admiral. He died without issue. John studied law and entered practice in New York city in 1730. In August, 1751, Governor Clinton, (the first), recommended him for appointment as a member of the Council, saying that he was "a gentleman of good reputation and a large estate, and a person the most agreeable in the whole province," as he had "always behaved with moderation, never countenancing any faction." He served in this capacity until 1762. In 1754, he was one of the representatives of the province in the famous Congress at Albany. In 1751, he was appointed Second Justice of the Supreme Court, which he resigned in 1761. He died in 1762-3. Governor Colden writes: "I never heard his integrity called in question." "His religion was that of the Church of England, of which he was not only a zealous professor but an ornament, and an honor to the religion he professed." (Jones' History N. Y.)

WILLIAM SOUTHERLAND.

William Southerland, (now written Sutherland), was also a settler on the patent with Chambers prior to its issue. He died leaving a family, of whom David Sutherland was a purchaser from Dr. John Nicoll of a portion of the Lawrence patent, in the town of Cornwall, and is presumed to have been the founder of the Cornwall family of Sutherlands. Sutherland's creek takes its name from him. Charles Sutherland was the holder of part of the original purchase in 1815. From abstract of wills on file in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Appeals, at Albany, the following abstracts are taken:

"Southerland. David, of New Cornwall Precinct, Orange Co., yeoman. Wife Mary; grandson Charles Southerland; sons Andrew, David, Alexander; granddaughters: Mary and Jane, daughters of dec'd son Patrick; daughters Jane, wife of William Edminster (?); Lesbia (?) wife of Moses Clark; Mary, wife of Robert Farrier; da.-in-law Margaret, widow of son Patrick.

"Dated February 27, 1769; probated November 3, 1778.

"Mack Gregory, Patrick, of Orange Co. yeoman. Daughter Mary, wife of David Southerland of Ulster Co., and her sons Patrick and David; grandson Gregor MacGregory. Executors: son-in-law David Southerland and John Alsop. Dated Feb. 25, 1727-8; probated Nov. 20, 1728."

Patrick Mack Gregory was son of Patrick MacGregory or MacGregor, of Plum Point.

PETER MATTHEWS.

Peter Matthews, originally from Ireland, was a captain in the War of 1692-'93, and engaged in active service in the Mohawk country. Governor Bellomont made a lieutenant of him, and wrote, in 1700, that he kept a tap-house in New York; that he was "bred up from a child with Governor Fletcher;" that it was at his house the "angry people" of New York had their club and held their cabals, and that he was no friend to him (Bellomont), for which reason he tried to have him removed or exchanged, but did not succeed. Governor Cornbury was his friend and sent him to England as bearer of dispatches in 1702. On his return he appears to have resumed his military duties, and in 1715 was appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He held several patents and was a party in others which were obtained in the names of other persons, among the number that to Chambers and Sutherland. He died in 1719. His son, Vincent Matthews (there is no record of other children), purchased, August 22d, 1721, for £1000, of Rip Van Dam & Co.,* the patent for three thousand acres of land, granted to them in 1709, on which he settled and to which he gave the name of Matthewsfield. He served as Clerk of the original County of Orange from 1726 to 1763; as Member of Assembly from 1726 to 1759, and as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1733. He was largely interested in land patents, holding among others the New Windsor tract, and the Forest of Dean tract. He died in June, 1784. It appears by his will, which is on file in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Appeals, of the State of New York, that he was married, first to Catalina Abeel, of Westenhook, Columbia County, by whom he had four children—1. Fletcher; 2. James; 3. David; 4. Bridget, (who married Doctor Evan Jones)* all of whom were born in Orange County. By his second wife Elizabeth, he had a daughter of the same name, who married Theophilus Beekman, of New York. Fletcher (1), married Sarah, daughter

*The patentees were Rip Van Dam, Adolph Phillipse, David Provost, Jr., Lancaster Syrus, and Thomas Jones. The tract contained 3,000 acres, of which each patentee held one-fifth. The patent was granted March 23, 1709.

Rip Van Dam & Co. (patent)—Rip Van Dam, Adolph Phillipse, David Provost, Jr., Lancaster Syrus, and Thomas Jones—3,000 acres—"beginning at a station bearing from Maringoman's wigwam west 24d., S. 85 chains." Issued March 23d, 1700.

Sold by Rip Van Dam, Adolph Phillipse, David Provost, Lancaster Syrus, John Thomas and David Jones, to Vincent Matthews, Aug. 22, 1721. Described. "Beginning at a certain station bearing from Maringoman's wigwam W. 24d. 85 ch. and runs thence N. 11d. E. 120 ch., thence E. 11 d. S. 200 ch., thence S. 11d. W. 180 ch., thence W. 27d. N. 211 ch., to the station above named, bounded on all four sides by unpatented lands. Containing in the whole 3,000 acres, be it more or less" Consideration £1,000.

Vincent Matthews erected grist mill at Salisbury—date not known—and sold the same to John Carpenter, July 21, 1762, for £800 N. Y. lawful money. Deed conveys lands and falls and grist mills on Murderer's Creek.—Orange County Review. Lib. C, 445.

Henry Wisner, in company with John Carpenter, was authorized to erect Powder Mill, "at or near John Carpenter's saw mill," in the precinct of Cornwall, April 27, 1776.—Prov. Con, N. Y.

Dr. Evan Jones had his residence in New Windsor. He died about 1763, leaving sons John and Thomas. The latter was a physician in practice in New York city, from which place he returned to Matthewsfield in 1777. He was appointed member of the State Senate from New York, under the first constitution (1777), but resigned in consequence of failing health.—Journal Prov. Con., II, 440.

of Jesse Woodhull, in 1758. He resided in the city of New York, during the latter part of his life, and died there. His daughter, Catalina, married Jonathan Brooks. David (3), married Sarah Seymour in 1758, by whom he had ten children. He succeeded his father as Clerk of the County of Orange (1763), but subsequently removed to New York, of which city he was appointed Mayor, by Governor Tryon, in 1776. Soon after his appointment, he was arrested by the Committee of Safety, charged with conduct inimical to the cause of American Independence, and sent for safe keeping to Hartford, Conn. James (2), married Hannah Strong, in 1762. He was the father of General Vincent Matthews, of Rochester (born in Orange County in June, 1766; died June 23, 1846), who served in the State Senate, and in Congress, and was regarded, at the time of his death, as the father of the bar of western New York. Vincent and his sons David and Fletcher, and his grandson, Vincent, were members of the bar of Orange County. The family was a remarkable one in many respects.

General Vincent Matthews, born Orange County, 1766; died Rochester, 1846; m Juliana Strong, born 1773, died Rochester, 1850; daughter of Nathaniel and Amy (Brewster) Strong, of Blooming Grove Orange County, N. Y. Vincent was a son of James Matthews, born at Matthewsfield (Blooming Grove), 1742; died at Ebserion, 1816; married Hannah Strong, born 1742, daughter of Selah and Hannah (Woodhull) Strong. Born, 1722, died 1776; Vincent (2), son of Vincent Matthews (1), born 1699, died at New York, 1784. m. Catalina Abell, born, 1698, daughter of John Abell; born 1667, died 1711, Mayor of Albany, 1694-'5.

Fletcher Matthews, of New York—During the war he was proceeded against by the Commissioners appointed to the charge of persons who adhered to the crown, and was ordered to be sent within the British lines. But Governor Clinton having so far interfered with the decision as to detain him for the purpose of exchange, he was suffered to remain in the country without interruption.

Sabrina.—He was not a resident of New York city, but of Orange County, living near the home of Governor Clinton, and an early neighborhood associate, and under Governor Clinton's protection he lived and died at Matthewsfield.

Fletcher Matthews' residence was in the old town of New Windsor prior to his removal to New York. The property was subsequently occupied by his son-in-law, Jonathan Brooks.

JOHN ALSOP.

John Alsop was the son of Richard Alsop, who died at Newton, L. I., October, 1718, aged about fifty-eight years. He married December, 1718, Abigail, daughter of Joseph Sackett. He adopted the profession of law; located at New Windsor in 1724-'5, and was admitted to practice in the courts of Orange County in 1734. He removed to New York in 1749, and there continued his legal pursuits until his death, which occurred April 8, 1761, aged 64 years. He left two sons, John, Jr., and Richard, and two daughters, Euphemia and Frances. Euphemia married Thos. Stevenson; Frances died single. John, Jr., became eminent as a politician, represented the city of New York in the Provincial Convention, and was a delegate to the first Continental Congress in 1774. Although a whig, in the early part of the controversy with the Mother country, he was opposed to separation from the crown, and hence when the Declaration of Independence was adopted, he resigned his seat in Congress. He died November 22, 1794, leaving one child, Mary, who married the distinguished Rufus King, and was the mother of the late Hon. John A. King. Governor George Clinton and John Alsop, Jr., were born almost side by side, in the town of New Windsor; served together in the historical Continental Congress, and had the latter been as fortunate in his political associations as the former, he would have left behind him a completed record.

JOSEPH SACKETT.

Joseph Sackett and Joseph Sackett, Jr., whose names are more or less identified with the history of the town, were natives of Newtown, L. I.* Joseph, Jr., was the fourth of that name, and also the fourth son of his father. He married Millicent, daughter of Samuel Clowse, of Jamaica, and after doing business in New York as a merchant for some years, removed to New Windsor prior to the organization of the township, where he owned a "small piece of land between the land of John Alsop on the north, and the land of Thomas Ellison on the south," on which he established a store and a wharf, and from which he proposed to run a ferry to Fishkill in 1742, but failed to obtain a charter. "Sackett's Alley," in the village of New Windsor, was so called from his use and possession.

SAMUEL BREWSTER.

Samuel Brewster, who became a resident of the town of New Windsor about 1743, was the son of Timothy (2), son of Timothy (1), who was the son of Nathaniel Brewster,* who was the son of Jonathan Brewster, son of Elder William Brewster, of Plymouth colony, who embarked from England on the Mayflower, September 6, 1620, and died at Duxbury, Mass., in 1644. On his removal to New Windsor he was accompanied by his brother, Henry, who, with himself, formed two of sixteen proprietors of the "Township of New Windsor" (now the village of New Windsor), in 1749. He established a saw mill at the foot of Forge-hill, now in the village of Moodna, and subsequently a forge and anchorage, which he conducted for several years, and at which he constructed in part the obstructions to the navigations of the Hudson during the war of the Revolution. His early residences would seem to have been in New Windsor village and later at Moodna (then Orangeville). In 1763 he erected a stone house on the Forge-hill road, a short distance north of Temple Hill, now or lately on the farm of the late Francis Weygant. A stone in the north gable bears the initials of his name and date. It is presumed that it was erected for his son Timothy, who removed to Woodbridge, N. J., after the Revolution. The house is marked on the DeWitt Map of the encampment of the army in 1783, and has remained as an unmistakable landmark. From his first advent in the town he seems to have taken the rank of a man of substantial character and to have maintained it. On the organization of the Presbyterian Church of New Windsor, September 14, 1764, he was chosen one of its Elders, and in 1773, served as Trustee of the united congregations of Bethlehem and New Windsor for the Murderer's Creek district and also for the New Windsor district. In 1763, he was one of the Assessors of the town. He was active in promoting the success of the Revolution, and filled the post of Chairman of the Committee of Safety of the town during the entire period, and served as a member of the Provincial Convention, 1775-6, and of the Committee of Safety of that body in which was vested all authority during the recess of the Convention. His more pressing duties in the construction of the river obstructions compelled his retirement in 1777. He died February 10, 1802, in his 83d year, and his wife, Mary Wood, died February 3d, 1807, in her 85th year.

*Webster in his "History of Presbyterianism in America," writes: "Brookhaven, L. I., was settled from Boston, in 1655. For thirty-five years the town had for its minister Nathaniel Brewster, the grandson of the Ruling Elder of the Pilgrim Church of Plymouth."

Their children were: 1. Samuel; 2. Timothy; 3. Hannah (married ——— DuBois); 4. Abigail (married Jonas Williams); 5. Susanna (married ——— Moores)—of whom Samuel (1), settled in Rockland (then Orange) County, and, was State Senator in 1805. (See History Rockland County). Timothy (2), was born in New Windsor, November 3, 1746; married Phebe Wood, born February 17, 1754; removed to Basking Ridge, N. J., near the close of the Revolution, and from thence to Woodbridge, N. J., where he occupied a large tract of land bordering on Staten Island Sound, now or lately in the possession of one branch of his descendants. His children were:

1. Samuel, (2), born July 12, 1775; married Jane Wood, and had Phebe, Benjamin, Timothy, Jonas W., Harriet,* Mary, Amy Maria, married Jesse Smith Woodhull, died September 30, 1824, aged 27 years, and one whose name has not been learned.

2. John, born August 15, 1777; died August 27, 1822; married, February 27, 1797, Nancy, daughter of James Meeker. (See Munsell's American Ancestry.)

3. Jonas W., born February 28, 1780—had one son and two daughters—names not ascertained.

4. Mary, born April 7, 1782, married ——— Noe, had Catharine and Albert, the latter a well-known resident of Newburgh.

5. Nathaniel, born October 27, 1786, married, first, Keziah O Smedes, had William C. (known as Captain William C. Brewster, of Coldenham), Nathaniel Augustus, and Susan Ann, (Mrs. George C. Weeks). His first wife died April 9, 1853, and he married second, Mary Ann Bowne, without issue. Nathaniel Brewster removed from Woodbridge to Orange County about 1812, and located on a farm in the town of Montgomery. In 1823, he was elected an elder of Goodwill Church, in which office he remained until his death in 1869.

6. Timothy, born April 22, 1789, married Juliet Wood, and had Cordelia, Mary (Mrs. Martine), Harriet, Eugene A.,and Catharine—

*Harriet, daughter of Samuel (2) married Andrew J. Callwell, of Salisbury Mills, by whom she had three daughters and two sons; of whom Samuel Brewster and Richard were survivors in 1885. Her father was State Senator from the Middle District 1805. 6, 7, 8. See Civil List; also Hammond's Political History, 207, etc.

Eugene A. Brewster was born in New York city April 13, 1827, the family removing to Newburgh when he was three years old. Thrown upon his own resources he was an earnest student, and early qualified for the position of a subordinate instructor in the Newburgh High School, where he was employed for two years. In August, 1843, he entered the office of the late Hon. John W. Brown as a student and was admitted to the bar in 1848. He remained in Judge Brown's office until that gentleman took his seat as Judge of the Supreme Court in January, 1850. He then united in partnership with Nathan Reeve, under the residents of Newburgh. Phebe Wood, first wife of Timothy (1), died May 10, 1792, aged 38 years. By his second wife he had:

7. George Y., born December 28, 1794, married Elizabeth ———, had Catharine, born July 23, 1821; Ezra M., born January 28, 1823; Walter, born October 11, 1824; Sarah E., born September 11, 1826; Albert, born November 18, 1830.

8. James, born in 1798, died in infancy.

Abigail, daughter of Samuel Brewster (1), who married, January 13, 1779, Jonas Williams, of Moodna, had five daughters: 1. Mary, who married Jacob Drake, of New York; 2. Anne, who married John Nicoll, of New Windsor; 3. Helen, who married Doctor J. B. Holmes, of Morristown, N. J.; 4. Susan E., who married Peter Roe,* of New Windsor; and 5. Abigail, who married Samuel Oakley, of New York. Her sons were: Richard and Samuel Williams, the latter for several years a merchant in Newburgh and the father of Colonel George A. Williams, U. S. A., Charles E. Williams, Jonas William and Mrs. Robert A. Forsyth. William, Jr., Captain 56th Regiment, killed at Fair Oaks. Mrs. Abigail (Brewster) Williams died December 22, 1804.

Anne Williams, daughter of Jonas and Abigail (Brewster) Williams, born December 22, 1785, died August 20, 1861, married John Nicoll, October 29, 1802.

Ruth Nicoll, daughter of Anne and Jonas Williams, born July 12, 1810, died July 9th, 1885, married September 13, 1831, John Richard Coldwell—children, William, John Nicoll, Richard, Charles, Mary, James Parks.

TIMOTHY BREWSTER.

Timothy Brewster, brother of Samuel Brewster, located in Cornwall near Murderer's Creek, where, in 1765, he was chosen, at Precinct meeting, one of Overseers of Roads for the "water-side" district. He married Elizabeth, third daughter of Nathan Clark, Jr., and Abigail Mill's his wife. She was born in Bedford, Westchester County, N. Y., about 1741, and married at Cornwall, N. Y., sometime prior to 1766, and at firm name of Reeve & Brewster, which continued for five years, at the expiration of which time he opened an office and has since conducted a large legal business, ranking among the most competent in his profession. He was one of the original members of the Almshouse Commission, and has also served with credit as a member of the Board of Education. He married in 1859, Anna W., daughter of Rev. John Brown, D. D.

*See Roe Family in History of Newburgh. Rev. E. P. Roe was one of her descendants.

that date herself and husband united by profession with the Presbyterian Church at its organization, May 5th, of that year, as appears by the records of that church. The children of Timothy Brewster and Elizabeth, his wife, were Nathan, Isaac, Jacob, Phebe (married John Canfield), and Sarah (married a Butterworth)—(Genealogy of Samuel Clark, Sr.). Nathan Clark, Sr. was one of the settlers at Rippowanis, now Stamford, Conn., in 1646. The following entries appear in New Windsor Church records:

“1778, Nov. 30—Married—Timothy Brewster and Sarila Wood, widow, Cornwall Precinct.

“1776, March 1—Baptised—Elizabeth, daughter to Timothy Brewster, Senior.”

John and Henry Brewster, also brothers (?) of Samuel, settled in the Blooming Grove district and founded families.

ROBERT BOYD.

The Boyds of New Windsor, Robert and Robert, Jr., were natives of Scotland and blacksmiths by occupation. Robert, Sr. was a purchaser on the McIntosh patent, prior to 1751. Robert, Jr., obtained from Nathan Smith (Jan. 14, 1761 lot No. 51, in the village of New Windsor, and at a later period, a farm of one hundred acres on the northeast corner of the Chambers patent. He was especially active in local affairs, and was Chairman of the County Committee of Ulster in 1775-'76, and of the Committee of Safety of his town. From 1779 to 1781 he was a Member of the Legislature. In 1775 he established a forge, near what is now Walsh's paper mills, for the manufacture of gun-barrels, bayonets etc., for which he had a contract from the Revolutionary authorities of the state. He was one of the founders of the Associate Reformed Church of Newburgh in 1798, and one of its incorporators in 1803. The property which he occupied for many years was in the vicinity of his mill, on the road leading from Newburgh to New Windsor, and has been known in later years as the Havemeyer place. He died October 29, 1804, aged 70 years. His father died February 15, 1786, aged 33 years. Who his children were, besides Robert, Jr., has not been ascertained.* Robert, Jr. left two sons, Samuel and Nathaniel, and one daughter, Janet. The latter married Doctor Baltus L. Van Kleeck, for many years an esteemed physician of Newburgh. The late Rev. R. B. Van Kleeck, of the Episcopal Church, was her son.

*George Boyd, born 1733, died 1850, removed to Philadelphia, married Elizabeth Livingston,—Colgate's American Ancestors.

NATHAN SMITH.

Few of the early settlers of the town were more active in its affairs than Nathan Smith.* The date of his settlement was as early as 1768, as his name then appears in the list of town officers. It is said that he was born in the town of Huntington, L. I., and that his father was a Presbyterian minister, who left England on account of religious persecution, and who married a Miss Mowbray of Long Island, by whom he had two sons and two daughters, some of whose descendants are still living on the south side of Long Island. Nathan, his youngest son, married at Paramus, N. J., Susan McIntosh, a daughter or grand-daughter of Phineas McIntosh, one of the early patent holders in New Windsor, upon whose patent he settled and where he established a fulling mill, a grist mill, and a store, giving to his place the title of Hunting-Grove. He continued his residence here until a year before his death, when he exchanged it for a farm two miles west of the then village of Newburgh. He was Supervisor of New Windsor from 1776 to 1780, and Member of the Committee of safety of the town. From 1777 to 1793 he was one of the representatives in the Assembly from Ulster County, with the exception of two terms. In 1793 he was appointed First Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, of Ulster County, and held that office at the time of his death. In September, 1798, he was in New York visiting Governor Clinton and friends, apparently in his usual health. On his way to the sloop on which he was to take passage for Newburgh, he was attacked by yellow fever and conveyed to the hospital, where he died. At the time of his death he was fifty-two years of age. He left seven children: 1. Susan, married William W. Sackett, resided in New Windsor and Newburgh, but ultimately settled in Sullivan County; 2. Charles F., a lawyer, settled at Clyde, N. Y.; 3. Augustus, a lawyer, died unmarried; 4. Mowbray, married and removed to southern Virginia; 5. Nathan, died unmarried; 6. Fell, died unmarried; 7.

*There were two persons of this name in the town. The first Nathan was the purchaser from John Chambers, in 1758, of that portion of the Chambers and Sutherland patent held by William Chambers, one of the patentees, and also part of the Ingoldsby patent and one half of lot No. 1, of the German patent. In the deed to him he is described as a "blacksmith of Kingston." He was one of the proprietors of the Township of New Windsor, where he sold lot No. 51, to Robert Boyd, blacksmith of the city of New York," January 14, 1761. He is not known to have been in any way connected with the person referred to in this sketch.

Elizabeth, married David Hunter,* and died in 1854. Her oldest son, C. F. Hunter, is now (1878) President of the People's Bank, of New York city. He has five children. A younger son, E. M. Hunter, U. S. Commissioner, at Milwaukee, Wis., died in 1877. Her daughters, Cornelia B. and Susan F., married (first and second) T. Van Wyck Brinkerhoff, of Hopewell, Dutchess Co. Judge Smith is described as of fine personal appearance, and mild and gentle disposition. He had a legal education, and was in every respect qualified for the official stations to which he was called, and was a trusted friend and supporter of New York's first governor, George Clinton.

*David Hunter was a widower when he married Miss Smith. His first wife was a daughter of Johannes Miller, of Montgomery, by whom he had two children, Emeline and Johannes M. Emeline married Dr. Samuel Dimmick, of Sullivan County, father of Samuel E. Dimmick of Newburgh. He was a son of James Hunter, and in his day was a man of considerable prominence. In company with Daniel Sloan he conducted a large lumber, grocery and mercantile business in Bloomingburgh.

CHAPTER XI

CIVIL WAR.

The number of volunteers furnished by the Town during the Civil War was:

Prior to July 1st, 1863	129
January and February, 1864	72
August, 1864	24
December Call, 1864	2
	227

In the settlement with the State under the act to equalize bounties, the town was paid for an excess of sixty-nine years or twenty-three three-years'-men, $13,800; and for bounties for two men $1,200—total—$15,000.

The sum of $4,620 was raised by subscription for the payment of bounties in 1862, of which sum $300 unexpended was returned to the subscribers. The town shared in the county bounty of 1863, but subsequently issued its own bonds for the payment of town bounties. Of the county bounty it paid in principal and interest $23,935.21, and the principal and interest of its town bonds amounted to $17,200.48.* The total payment for bounties, after deducting the $300 refunded and the $15,000 from the State, amounted to $30,545.69. The proportion of the State tax levied for all war purposes has not been ascertained.

The following list of volunteers is compiled from county lists and credits of Senatorial Committee:

Young, John—Settled at Little Britain.

A Genealogical and Biographical Sketch

Written by Joseph Young, at the request of his niece, Barbara Hartell, who wished to gain some knowledge of her progenitors and collateral kindred, as recollected in memory.

Written in June, 1807.

James Clinton, Esquire, who lived near Belfast, in the north of Ireland had a sister named Margaret; and one son named Charles, and two daughters, viz: Christina and Mary. Margaret, the sister of James, was married to my great-grandfather, John Parks, and had a son named John (who was the grandfather of Arthur Parks), and two daughters, Jane and Barbara. About the year 1700, the whole connexion removed to the County of Longford, and lived nearly contiguous to each other near Edgeworthstown, where Jane Parks was married to my grandfather, John Young, and had a son named John, and a daughter, Mary; and my grand-aunt Barbara Parks (sister to Jane and daughter of Margaret Clinton), was married to John Crawford,* and has three sons, viz: Matthew, Alexander and Joseph, and a daughter named Mary. After my grandfather John Young died, his widow (Jane) was married to Thomas Armstrong. They lived in this vicinity (Edgeworthstown), until sometime in the year 1727 or 1728 the whole connexion growing more and more dissatisfied with the government, resolved to emigrate to the then colony of New York; and as if bound together by the indissoluble ties of consanguinity and friendship, the greatest number of those who had emigrated from the north, with some additional members, engaged a ship at Dublin, commanded by a Captain Rymer, and all paid their passage money there, and had the ship bound to them for the faithful performance of their agreement. They laid in a sufficient stock of provisions for an ordinary passage, but instead of a common passage he kept them at sea twenty-one weeks and three days. During the passage

*John Crawford purchased lands in New Windsor in 1738. He is presumed to have been son of James Crawford, and brother of James, 2d.

Jane, wife of Thomas Armstrong, died at Little Britain, February 5th, 1761, aged 84 years. (Monument in Clinton burial grounds.) Thomas Armstrong, who was her second husband, died on the voyage to America.

they one morning came in full sight of the coast of Virginia, which the boatswain, who was an old seaman, affirmed he knew perfectly well, as he had frequently been on that coast before; but the captain called him a lying, skulking dog, and immediately ordered to put the ship about and put off to sea; in consequence of this unequivocal disclosure of the Captain's intention to famish them all to death at sea, William Armstrong (my father's half-brother) would have put him to death, had he not been forcibly restrained. Colonel Charles Clinton, who by his age and superior abilities, appears to have been the head or chief of the connexion, who had a better knowledge of the laws than the others, told them that unless the other officers belonging to the ship would join them, their rising forcibly against the captain would, upon trial, be adjudged piracy. But the spirits of the officers were so completely subdued by the tyrannical conduct of the captain, who had killed a man on board by striking him on the head with a pipe-stave, that they dare not join the passengers against him. In this shocking dilemma the captain extorted from them a very considerable sum of money, as a bribe for landing them on any part of the coast. Soon after this agreement he landed them at Cape Cod.

For several days previous to their landing, their allowance had been a half biscuit and half a pint of water for twenty-four hours. In consequence of this cruel treatment many of the passengers died, and amongst this number who perished with famine, was Thos. Armstrong. He was a very valuable man. His son William and his daughter Margery, shared the same fate. They arrived at Cape Cod in the fall and remained there until spring, and then sailed for New Windsor in Ulster County, where Colonel Charles Clinton, Alexander Denniston and my father, John Young, bought three farms adjoining each other and lived in the greatest friendship and harmony; and called their neighborhood Little Britain.

The Colonel's two sisters, Christina and Mary, lived some years contiguous to their brother and then removed to New York. Sometime in the year 1729 or '30 my father married his cousin, Mary Crawford, daughter of Barbara and sister to James Parks. By this means the descendants of John Young have derived a double portion of Clinton blood, from their grandmothers, which they prize much more than to have been related to the assuming family of Livingston. My father had four sons, to wit: Thomas, Joseph, John and Isaac, and three daughters, viz: Jane, Mary and Barbara. Thomas was born the 19th of February, 1731. He exhibited very early signs of a fertile genius, and surprising memory. Our grandmother, Jane, was a good English scholar and learned us to read, and by the time Thomas was six years old he could read any English book correctly and fluently. As there were but few children in their new settlement, they had no schoolmaster. But my father, who was a tolerable arithmetician, undertook to teach him with the assistance of Cocker's Arithmetic. My father found little more necessary than to explain the reasons of each operation, in the first questions in each of the first rules, when he took up the business himself and went through the book without any further instructions. This uncommon rapid progress in the acquisition of useful knowledge, by a person so young, excited the admiration of many. Sometime after Mr. John Wilson, a famous mathematician, opened a school about four miles distant, to which the young self-taught student was sent. The neighbors who knew the strength of his genius, told the master that he would acquire great credit by teaching him; but it appears that the genius of our young student was not confined to one track—he was extremely sprightly and playful and his invention quite equal to his other talents, which he did not fail to exercise in a pretty full school, by diverting the attention of the scholars from their studies. The master called at the house of one who had said so much in praise Tommy's great genius, who asked him how Tommy improved? The master replied, "I have as yet suspended my judgment concerning him, but if his other talents are equal to his invention of means to excite laughter and merriment, he is surely a most surprising lad."

Tommy went on in his thoughtless career, until he one day chanced to displease a pompous young man, who had made considerable progress in figures, who insultingly told him, "since Providence has denied you the capacity or talents to acquire any useful knowledge, you should not interrupt those who have both the inclination and capacity to learn; besides, I shall have a great estate to manage, which will require all the knowledge I can gain to manage it, and support my rank. But if you can gain a knowledge of pounds, shillings and pence, it is all you will ever have occasion for." Tommy, viewing him with the most sovereign contempt, replied, "Sir, you talk very exultingly of your talents and capacity; but I will convince you before the end of six weeks I will be qualified to teach you, and from that period as long as you and I shall live." From that hour he quit his wild pranks and commenced the attentive student, and fairly verified his promise to the satisfaction and gratification of the whole school. Mr. Wilson's fame as a mathematical teacher soon procured him an invitation to open a school in New York, where he removed.

Thomas had from infancy an invincible propensity to the study of physic, and often declared to me, when we were very young, that if it should be proposed by those who possessed the power to confer it, to make him Emperor of the whole earth, on condition that he would relinquish the study of physic, he would spurn the proposal. But as he knew, a knowledge of the Languages would be a necessary acquirement, he now turned all his attention to effect this purpose. But as there was no Latin master in the place at that time, he resolved to learn it from books. He accordingly borrowed a Vocabulary and a Concordi from Col. Clinton, who observed that he would find it much more difficult to learn Latin without the help of a master, than to go through Cocker without assistance. He returned the books in about six weeks. The Colonel naturally concluded that Thomas had been convinced of the impracticability of his design; he, however, examined him to find out what progress he had made, and soon discovered that every word of both books were perfectly imprinted in the memory of his student. The Colonel laid by the books and told Tommy that he wished to see his father on business. Our father soon waited on the Colonel, who told him that it would be almost criminal to let such a promising genius sink in obscurity for want of an education that could be so easily acquired, and added: "I am going to New York and if you wish to give him the means of improvement, in any degree adequate to the merit of his uncommon diligence and surprising talents, if you will give me the money I will bring him a set of the Classics; and after he has perused them sufficiently, I am confident that, by the assistance of a good tutor, for a few months, will give him a good knowledge of the Latin language." The plan was executed and when the young student got his books he retired every fair day to a pleasant arbor, composed of young trees interwoven with grape vines so as to render it impervious to the rays of the sun, and was rarely seen except at meal time. But the effect of such intense application became so visible in his conduct that his parents were alarmed with apprehension, that if he could not be immediately diverted from his studies, his mental faculties might be much injured. Matters were so arranged that one of the Colonel's sons called and coaxed him to go home with him, where they would have a variety of books to read; but matters were so contrived that the key of the Colonel's library was mislaid and could not be found. He remained in this friendly asylum until he resumed his cheerful sprightly humor. This happened in the golden age, when friendship was a reality and not an empty name. He assumed his studies again with more prudence and much better success, for now everything which he learned was indelibly impressed in his memory, and from this period I do candidly believe that he never forgot anything, unless past the power of recollection, that was worth retaining. After he had obtained a very considerable knowledge of his grammar and other Latin authors, there fortunately came a minister to the parish, who was a good linguist, under whom he completed his Latin education. And I have reason to believe that although he was not a complete Grecian scholar, he knew the radical meaning of every technical term in the arts and sciences that has been borrowed from that language. He had gained a tolerable knowledge of the High Dutch language, by reading their books, which he completed during his medical apprenticeship with Doctor John Kitterman. He could read and understand the French language, but never attempted to converse in it, as he was unacquainted with its pronunciation. But as the study of physic was always his darling pursuit, his books on that favorite subject still made one of the selected number. He was indefatigable in the study of Botany, and at a very early period in life, he was acquainted with almost all the indigenous plants in our part of the country and their virtues.

With these preparatory qualifications he commenced his apprenticeship, probably about the age of 17, and remained about two years, but before the expiration of that time, many of the patients reposed more confidence in the skill of the apprentice, than in that of the tutor (Dr. Kitterman). During this period he gained a facility of conversing in both High and Low Dutch. He then took lodgings at the house of Captain ——— Winogar, in Sharon, Conn., and soon acquired fame and a very extensive practice, being frequently called to remote parts in Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York. * * * As his practice in the country was very extensive and fatiguing, I urged him to remove to some popular city, where the toil would be less and the profits greater. He at length consented and resolved to remove to Albany, as he and a number of wealthy men were agreeing with Colonel John Henry Lydius, of the city of Albany for several townships of land of six miles square, which lie in the now State of Vermont. But the great land-jobbers in New York, by endeavoring to defeat Lydius' title, that they might share in the profits, retarded the settlement of the country, and by their eagerness to grasp the shadow (they lost the substance).

We removed to Albany in October, 1764. Doctor Young displayed the strength and power of his mind to very great advantage in combating the great lawyers, in defense of Colonel Lydius' title, but as the history would be too lengthly I must omit it. But when the Stamp Act was passed he exerted himself strenuously to oppose it, and when the Stamps arrived, he was one of a small number who visited the Stamp Officer and caused him to resign. In the fall of 1766 he resolved to remove to Boston, where the energies of numbers of American patriots were in full operation. When he arrived, he soon became an active member of the patriotic band, and was honored by the Tories and British by being classed by them among the number of the anti-rebels, to wit: John Hancock, Samuel Adams, the great and truly excellent Doctor Warren, etc., etc. Doctor Young, by his great activity and strenuous exertions to counteract the nefarious designs of the British, had excited their indignation to such a degree that two of their officers attacked him one night in the street. They knocked him down and probably supposing they had killed him, ran off. He was carried home to his family all bloody. When he recovered he said he should certainly have been killed, but as he had seen the blow coming he had moved his head to one side; the weapon in consequence had brushed down his temple, and spent its chief force on his soulder. But this atrocious attempt to assassinate him had alarmed his wife to such a degree that when he went out at night she frequently cried until he returned. His friends, in consequence, advised him to remove to Newport, Rhode Island, until some favorable change took place. He accordingly removed there, and remained until the British concerted their design to seize those who they called the ring-leaders of the rebellion and send them in irons to England. But as it would be necessary to seize them all at one time, a particular day was appointed and Wallace of the Rose man-of-war, was deputed to go to Newport and seize Doctor Young, but lest he should have a long passage, I think they allowed him three or four days. He, however, had a very short passage and had time to concert plans with the Tories and watch the Doctor until the arrival of the appointed day. Intelligence of the intent against his liberty was gained by Doctor Young by means of a sewing girl, who had frequently been employed in his family, but was now employed in a Tory family. She overheard them whispering and learned that the Doctor was to be taken prisoner that night. She hid her thread to make an errand to go out to get more. She went directly to a merchant, who she knew to be a great friend of the Doctor, and told him what she had heard. He set off to go the Doctor, but met him by the way, and told him if he was not off the Island before midnight he would be a prisoner on board of the Rose man-of-war. The Doctor replied, "What will become of my family?" The generous merchant told him not to concern himself about his family. "You must go off immediately to Philadelphia; I will take care of them and send them to you by water"—which he performed most faithfully without charging the Doctor one farthing. He told him there were spies watching his motions, but that he should come to his house after it began to grow dark; that he would equip him and have him sent off the Island. The Doctor thanked him for his kindness. When he returned home he found two young ladies from a Tory family there who had never visited him before. He was at no loss to guess the cause of such a friendly visit, but assumed a very sprightly air, took his violin and played a number of tunes; then took his oldest daughter into another room pretending to want her assistance to prepare some medicine. He then told her that he had a secret to communicate to her, if she would promise to keep it inviolate, even from her mother, which she promised; he then told her the whole, and exhorted her by all means to appear cheerful. He then caused her to pack up some shirts and put the bundle out of a back window. Fortunately about dusk, a messenger called on him to visit a patient at some little distance. He told the messenger to return and that he would set off in a few minutes. The messenger returned, and when it grew dark the Doctor went to his friend, who equipped him in a complete sailor's dress. Our new made Jack Tar took up his bundle, embarked on board of a boat, and his brother sailors soon landed him on terra firma. He pushed on and soon met his brother fugitives, John Hancock and Samuel Adams in Philadelphia; and soon after had the felicity to receive his family from on board of one of his benefactor's vessels.

The fugitives hired a house in Philadelphia and fell into some private practice until the General Hospital was established, when he was appointed a senior physician, and with the celebrated Doctor Rush, had the chief care of the Hospital until his death. He died in June, 1777, of a most virulent putrid fever; which appeared to be almost as fatal as the plague. His very valuable library, which he had collected with great care and cost, was sold for Continental money, and was in a great measure lost to his family. These are a few of the incidents which occurred in the life of a man of superior talents, and, as far as I am capable of judging, of the most consummate physician I ever knew. He married Mary, the daughter of Captain Winegar, of Sharon, Conn., by whom he had two sons, viz: John and Rosmond, and four daughters, viz: Susannah, Catharine, Sarah and Mary. Rosmond died young. Susan was married to a Mr. Knies, of Philadelphia, and had two sons, Thomas and John. She died about 1803 or '4; her sons, Thomas and John, removed to the westward of Albany, and their grandmother, Mary Young, lives with them. John Young, the only surviving son of Doctor Thomas, studied physic under his father and was a Mate, in the Hospital, until his father died, and was then sent to the Hospital, at Albany, to be under my care. After the conclusion of the war he practiced in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, but removed to Hendersonville, Tennessee, where he was killed by a fall from his horse, in November, 1805. He married Mary Hammond, at Fayette, by whom he had four children, viz: Mary, Thomas, William and Sarah. Catharine, the second daughter of Doctor Thomas, was married to Mr. Daniel Castle, who removed to near Canandaigua Lake, where she died, but I do not know how many children she left. Sarah was married to Mr. Clark, at Sharon or Amenia; and Mary was married to a Doctor Strong, but I know nothing of their children.

Joseph, the second son of John Young, was born on the seventh day of February, 1733. He had an equal desire to acquire useful knowledge, but was neither blessed with that penetrative conception, which seemed to border on intuition, nor that admirable retentive memory, which gave his brother Thomas such superior advantages; but he endeavored to compensate for the defect by accurate observations and attentive application, aiming in all his pursuits at the investigation of first principles, and cautiously reasoning from these to form conclusions founded on the intrinsic nature of the subject, strictly following the example of the celebrated Alexander Pope, to reason truly from what he knew—that is to say, from well known facts or axiom that cannot deceive or mislead the cautious inquirer, as he was convinced at a very early period, that the neglect of this rule was the prolific source of endless error, which no branch of science has escaped, either moral or physical, unless we may except the mathematics. He had, like his brother, an ardent desire to gain a knowledge of physic, and improved every opportunity in his power for that purpose, in which he was greatly assisted by Doctor Alexander Clinton, not as a professed student, but by riding with him and receiving oral instructions. He remained with his father until Doctor Clinton died, and then went and studied with his brother Thomas until 1765, and when Thomas removed to Boston, he remained in private practice in Albany until the Spring of 1776, when he was appointed by order of General Montgomery, to establish and superintend a hospital for the reception of the sick of the Continental Army. As our troops occupied Ticonderoga and Crown Point, there was a Hospital opened at Lake George, under the superintendence of Doctor S.

Stringer, and as the enemy were encroaching, General Schuyler concluded to send all the sick down to the Hospital at Albany, and ordered Doctor Stringer to send Doctor Young immediate notice that he might have time to prepare for their reception. Doctor Stringer probably wishing that Doctor Young might be embarrassed, omitted to send him any notice of the intended removal of the sick. General Schuyler, knowing Doctor Stringer's disposition, feared a calamitous result, and to prevent it sent his Aide-de-camp, John Lansing, Jr., to Albany to inquire if his order had been communicated to Doctor Young. Finding that it had not, Lieutenant Lansing reported to General Schuyler, and Doctor Stringer was soon cashiered. Doctor Young immediately employed carpenters who wrought like beavers and soon furnished every room with bunks. The sick soon came crowding down, and as there had not yet been a clerk appointed, Doctor Young had to enter their names, companies and regiments, to write orders for their provisions and prescribe for them; but the sick exulted greatly in the change of their condition. In 1776, Congress appointed Doctor Jonathan Polts to superintend a Hospital in the Canada department, but as our people were obliged to retreat, Polts came down to Albany and assumed the direction there, and commissioned some persons as prescribing physicians, who were scarcely qualified to be Mates. The Juniors and Mates, in derision called them Celestials. They, however, were not very troublesome about the Hospital; their chief amusement being to dance attendance at headquarters and visit some officers, who were at lodgings in the town. Everything went on cordially until sometime late in the year 1780, when Congress made a new arrangement in the General Hospital when many of those who attended least to their duty and attended most to their own interest, made personal application, or by their influential friends, and were retained in service, while Doctor Young, who had and was faithfully performing his duty, was by Doctor Shippen, left out of employment. Doctor Young and some of his friends immediately wrote to Congress the facts and the Doctor was immediately reinstated, Doctor John Cochran appointed Director, and the indolent Shippen removed. Doctor Young remained in charge of the Hospital at Albany until May 4th, 1784, when he sent off the few remaining invalids to be attended by a Mate in New York. He then removed to and practiced in New York until the fall of the year, 1797. He married in the fall of the year, 1762, Sarah, daughter of Mr. Samuel Brown, of Colchester, Conn., a most amiable, placid, benevolent woman, who died without issue in the month of November, 1768, and was buried in a vault under the Presbyterian meeting house, in Albany, much lamented by her husband and friends.

John and Jane, son and daughter of John Young, died young, and Mary was married to Mr. Samuel King, and had three sons, viz: Thomas, John and Samuel,* and four daughters, viz: Anna, Sarah, Mary and Rhody. Anna was married to Nicholas King and lives in the township of Galen; Sarah was married to Isaac Mills; Mary to David Godfrey, and Rhody to Elijah Tucker. Messrs. Mills, Godfrey and Tucker are dead, and I have no knowledge of their children.

My sister Barbara, was married to Matthew Neely (son of Robert, who married Isabella, sister to Adam Graham). She died soon after she was delivered of her only child, Barbara Amelia, the wife of Thomas Herttell, Esq.

Isaac, my brother, married Esther Wolcott in the state of Rhode Island, who died after having a son William and three daughters, viz: Sarah, married to Cornelius Tiebout, an eminent copperplate engraver, now in Philadelphia. She has two children, Joseph and Caroline. Isaac married a second wife, viz: Susannah Roos, of Fayette County, by whom he had seven children, viz: Robert, Nancy, Isaac, Effy, Nelly, Joseph and Jane, who all live in Kentucky, except Isaac, who is in partnership with his brother William at or near Uniontown, Pennsylvania. My brother Isaac came to New York on a visit in the summer of 1795, and died of yellow fever and was buried in Potter's Field.

My aunt, Mary Young, my father's sister, was married to John Brooks and had two daughters, viz: Jane and Mary. Jane was married to Doctor Isaac Vanheren Caspel, but herself and two children, which she had are dead. Mary, her sister, married Paul Blouck and left several children, who live in this city (New York). My uncle, Joseph Crawford, married Catharine Nelson, at Rhinebeck, and removed to Curriesbush, near Schenectady. He left several children, viz: Leah, John, Alexander and Lucretia; the names of the others I do not remember.

My father, John Young, died in 1784, aged 82 years.

Colonel Charles Clinton, nephew to my great grandmother Margaret, possessed an acute genius, a penetrating solid judgment, an extensive fund of useful as well as ornamental knowledge, with the affability and polished manners of a polite gentleman. He was a tall, straight, graceful person, of a majestic appearance. If he chanced to come into company where a number of young people were cheerfully diverting themselves, their first impressions were those of awe and reverence; but in the course of a few minutes he would enter into the most pleasing, and frequently instructive conversation, which soon dispelled their panic, and inspired them with pleasing and respectful confidence. He was a Judge of the County Court, and Justice of the Peace until he died; and a Colonel in the Army in the war, which commenced in the year 1756. He married Elizabeth Denniston, sister to Alexander, by whom he had one daughter, Catharine, a sensible, friendly, ingenious, placid being, who was married to Colonel James McLaughry, as brave an officer as America could boast of, she died without issue. Colonel Clinton and his wife, also four sons, viz: Alexander, Charles, James and George. After Alexander had acquired an excellent school education, he remained six years in College at Newark, when Mr. Burr was President; he then studied physic under Dr. Middletown, in New York, which he afterward practiced in Ulster County and parts adjacent; with great success and reputation. He excelled in everything to which he turned his attention; he was a good classic scholar, a great physician, a considerable poet, an excellent musician, and understood the use of the broadsword in a superior degree; but what finished and gave lustre to a truly great character was, that he was a most placid, agreeable, benevolent, friendly being, beloved and highly respected by every person who knew him; and I shall ever remember with pleasure and gratitude the attention and friendship with which he honored me. He married Miss Maria Kane, but died soon after of the confluent smallpox, greatly and very generally lamented; his memory is dear to many at this day, and to none more than to Joseph Young.

Charles, the second son, was a very sprightly lad, and had a good education. He also studied physic under Doctor Middletown, and embarked as a physician in the expedition against the Havana, and was much esteemed by the celebrated Doctor Huck. When he returned he practiced medicine with success and reputation in Ulster County and parts adjacent, and died a bachelor, of a lingering consumption. James, like David of old, had been a warrior from his youth up. After he had obtained a good education, he enlisted a company and served with reputation as a captain in the war, which commenced in 1756. He was a general in the Continental army, and signalized himself in endeavoring to defend a redoubt on the west bank of the North River, that was honored by the name of Fort Montgomery. When it became almost certain that they would finally be obliged to submit to superior numbers,

General James tried to persuade his brother George to leave the redoubt, alleging it would be a greater injury to our cause to have the Governor of the State taken prisoner, than if he should fall into their hands. They, however, both remained until it grew dark, and were mixed with the enemy; the Governor escaped in a boat to the east side of the river, and James slid down the very steep bank of a creek* which ran near the redoubt, and fell into the top of a hemlock tree, and made his escape by going up the bed of the brook, in which there was but little water at that time. When the enemy rushed into the redoubt, Colonel McClaughry and a Mr. James Humphrey, the cock of whose gun had been shot off, turned back to back and defended themselves desperately: they were assailed on all sides, and would undoubtedly have been killed, but a British Senator, who witnessed their spirit and bravery, exclaimed that it would be a pity to kill such brave men; they then rushed on and seized them, and when the Colonel was brought to the British General Clinton, he asked him where his friend George was? The Colonel replied, "Thank God, he is safe beyond the reach of your friendship." General James married an amiable woman, of the name of DeWitt, by whom he had four sons, viz: Alexander, DeWitt, Charles and George, Alexander was a youth of a very promising genius, but when he was — years old he was drowned in crossing the river from the city to Hoboken or Bull's Ferry. After DeWitt acquired a good education, he studied law under Samuel Jones, and being a firm, undeviating, inflexible patriot and a man of superior talents, he was soon honored with a seat in the Assembly of the State and has been a Senator in Congress, where he did honor to himself and to his State. In 1801 he was appointed to be Mayor of the city of New York, which office he executed with ability and integrity, until the winter of 1807, when he was displaced by Gov. Lewis and his nefarious Council, and Colonel Marinus Willett, an old doating superannuated Burrrite, substituted in his stead. But he is yet State Senator, and is nominated as a Republican candidate for the next four years. He married Maria Franklin, a daughter of Mr. Walter Franklin, an eminent merchant in this city (New York). Charles married Miss Elizabeth Mulliner, of Little Britain and now lives at Newburgh. I have been told that he is a valuable man and an expert surveyor of land. George studied law under his brother DeWitt, and being a man of capacity, he was honored with a seat in the State Assembly 1804, and in 1805, 1806 and 1807, has been a Member of Congress. He married Miss Hannah Franklin, sister to Mrs. Maria Clinton.

George, the youngest son of Colonel Charles Clinton, was placed when very young under the tuition of Mr. Daniel Thame, a gentleman who had acquired a liberal education in the college of Edinburgh. The activity and strength of the intellectual faculties of the young student became very perceptible at an early period, which caused him to be caressed by all his friends. After having acquired an excellent school education under several eminent tutors, he served either one or two campaigns as a lieutenant under his brother James. And then studied the law under the direction of William Smith, Esquire, which he practiced in Ulster County with ability and integrity. He had previously been appointed Clerk of this County, by Governor George Clinton.

When the troubles commenced between Britain and America, he was elected a Member of the Legislature, where he signalized himself in combating and defeating the nefarious schemes of the Tories. He was appointed a General in the Continental Army, in the year —, and when the State Constitution was formed he was unanimously chosen Governor of the State, and was successively re-elected to that most important office, in times that tried men's courage, ability and principles, until the year 1795, when, having greatly injured his health by his long and faithful service, he wished for a respite from public business; the consequence of which was that John Jay, Esquire, was chosen to succeed him. In the Spring of 1801, he was reinstated in the chair, which he had filled for eighteen years, with so much honor to himself and great advantage to the State and to the Union. Soon after he had declined a re-election in 1804, he was nominated for Vice-President of the United States, and elected without opposition, which station he now deservedly enjoys. He married Miss Catherine Tappan, in Kingston, Ulster County, of an ingenious, friendly, placid disposition, by whom he had one son named, George Washington, and five daughters, viz: Catharine, married Pierre Van Courtlandt, Esquire; Cornelia, married Monsieur Genet, formerly Embassador from the French Republic to the United States; Eliza, married Mathias B. Tallmadge; Maria —.

Christina Clinton, sister of the Colonel,* was married to a Mr. John Beatty, (in Ireland), and had a son, Charles, who was a celebrate! Presbyterian clergyman. He married in Jersey, and had sons that were officers in the Continental Army. She had also two daughters,

*Col. Charles, the progenitor of the family.

Martha and Mary. Martha was married in New York to _____, and Mary to Mr. Robert Gregg, and had three sons, viz; John, Charles and James, and one daughter, Jane. John was a youth of the most promising talents, and was supposed to be the best scribe on the continent. He was Secretary to Governor Belcher, of New Jersey; he died young. Charles was also a promising lad, but he also died young. James served with reputation as a Captain in the Continental Army, and died a bachelor. Jane was married to Stuart Wilson and had one son, George, and one daughter. They live about 16 miles from Schenectady, on the place which formerly belonged to Colonel Daniel Claus.

Mary Clinton, sister to Christiana, was married to Mr. Condy, and had one daughter Ann, commonly called Nancy, who was married to Mr. William Taylor, by whom he had one son, John, who is a man of eminent abilities, and an undeviating, inflexible patriot. He lived at Lake George until the commencement of the late war with Britain, when he removed to the city of Albany, and was soon chosen a member of the General Committee, where he distinguished himself in detecting and defeating the nefarious schemes of the Tories, and some half-way patriots. Since the termination of the war he has, by his abilities and upright undeviating conduct, gained the confidence of his fellow citizens so that he has been President of the State Bank, in Albany, a Judge of the County Court, and a Senator in the Legislature, and is now in nomination as a candidate for that important office. He married Miss Margaret Volkenberg, who died without issue. But he has adopted his niece, Margaret, daughter of John Vernor, Esquire, who is now married to Doctor Charles D. Cooper, who now lives with him.

William Parks, who was related to my grandmothers Jane and Barbara, married Janet Beatty, by whom he had two children, Arthur and Margaret. Arthur is now living at Ward's Bridge, on the Wallkill. He is a man of good natured abilities, which he greatly improved by reading, of which he was always very fond. He was elected a member of the State Legislature, at a very early period of the war, and was successively reelected for several years, and was a very valuable member. He married Miss _____ Howell, daughter of Hezekiah Howell, of Smith's Clove, by whom he has a son Charles, who studied physic and attended the medical lectures in New York. His sister Margaret, an accomplished woman, was married to Mr. David Bostwick, son of Mr. Bostwick, formerly a minister in New York. She is now a widow and removed to Troy.
